

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

EdueT 845.605.400

Harvard College Library

THE GIFT OF GRENVILLE HOWLAND NORCROSS
OF BOSTON
Class of 1875

"Who does the best in circumstance attains Done well, Actively. Progress cannot be more."

Paul W. Foster - from Auntie.

Hatfield June 16th 1887.

3 2044 097 040 927

CLASSICS FOR CHILDREN

KINGSLEY'S GREEK HEROES

TETLOW

GINN & COMPANY.

THE HEROES; OR,
GREEK FAIRY TALES

FOR MY CHILDREN.

BY CHARLES KINGSLEY.

With Illustrations by the Author.

EDITED, FOR THE USE OF SCHOOLS, BY JOHN TETLOW,
MASTER OF THE GIRLS' LATIN SCHOOL, BOSTON, MASS.

BOSTON:
PUBLISHED BY GINN & COMPANY.

1888.

Ex. T 845, 607, 400
✓

Francis H. Brown

Entered, according to Act of Congress, in the year 1884, by JOHN TETLOW,
in the office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington.

PREFATORY NOTE.

AS this edition of Kingsley's Greek Heroes is intended primarily for use in non-classical schools, such explanations as are needed for a proper understanding of classical allusions contained in the text are given in foot-notes. These explanatory notes are supplemented (see pp. v, vi) by a "Descriptive Table of Greek Divinities," the substance of which should be fixed in the memory, and by a "Pronouncing Index of Greek Proper Names," which should be consulted by the pupil as occasion requires. Notes purely geographical have been excluded, as free access on the part of the pupils to an ancient atlas or wall-map is believed to be essential to the intelligent use of these stories in the class-room.

In the writing of Greek proper names, some changes have been made from the spelling of the English edition, partly in the interest of a more consistent orthography, and partly for the correction of a few obvious errors.

J. T.

1

2

3

DESCRIPTIVE TABLE OF THE PROMINENT GREEK DIVINITIES MENTIONED IN THIS WORK.

Zeus was viewed by the Greeks as the king and father of gods and men, and the supreme ruler of the universe. He especially presided over (1) celestial phenomena, as tempests, clouds, thunder, lightning, etc.; (2) the laws and operations of nature, as the change of seasons, the succession of day and night, etc.; (3) the government of states and communities; (4) the individual welfare and happiness of men. In Roman and modern literature and art, the Roman divinity Jupiter is often identified with Zeus.

Hera was the sister and wife of Zeus. As the wife of Zeus she was the queen of heaven, and presided over marriage and the birth of children. In Roman and modern literature and art, the Roman divinity Juno is often identified with Hera.

Apollo (also called Phœbus Apollo and Phœbus) was the son of Zeus and Leto. He presided over healing, prophecy, music, and poetry. He was also the god of the sun, and as such received the epithet Phœbus, i.e., the Shining. He was, moreover, regarded as the destroyer of the wicked, and sudden death was viewed as the effect of his arrows.

Athene (also called Pallas Athene and Pallas) was said to have been born from the head of Zeus. She was the goddess of wisdom, of warlike defence, and of agriculture and the useful arts. As goddess of wisdom and of warlike defence, she was the special preserver of the state, and the protectress of heroes. As goddess of the useful arts, she presided over the feminine industries, as spinning and weaving. Athene was the great national divinity of Attica. In Roman and modern literature and art, the Roman divinity Minerva is often identified with Athene.

Poseidon was the brother of Zeus, and became by lot the supreme ruler of the sea. As god of the sea, he could excite or subdue tempests, earthquakes, and the like. The trident, or three-pronged spear, was the symbol of his power. In Roman and modern literature and art, the Roman divinity Neptune is identified with Poseidon.

Aphrodite, daughter of Zeus, was the goddess of love and of female grace and beauty. According to some traditions, she sprang at birth from the foam of the sea. In Roman and modern literature and art, the Roman divinity Venus is commonly identified with Aphrodite.

Hephæstus, son of Zeus and Hera, was the god of fire, especially of fire in its relation to the mechanic arts. He was the great artificer of the gods, and made for them beautiful palaces and gifts of exquisite workmanship. He was also the forger of the thunderbolts of Zeus. In Roman and modern literature and art, the Roman divinity Vulcan is often identified with Hephæstus.

Ares, son of Zeus and Hera, was the god of war and battles. Unlike Athene, who is the personification of thoughtful wisdom in warlike matters, Ares delights in slaughter for its own sake, and revels in the din and tumult of battle. In Roman and modern literature and art, the Roman divinity Mars is commonly identified with Ares.

Hermes, son of Zeus, was the herald and messenger of the gods. He was the god of eloquence, the protector of travellers and maintainer of roads, the god of commerce, and the patron of gymnastic games. He is represented with a travelling hat, a magic wand, and golden sandals provided with wings. In Roman and modern literature and art, the Roman divinity Mercury is often identified with Hermes.

Demeter, the bountiful earth-mother, was the sister of Zeus and the mother of Persephone. She was the goddess of the earth as the producer of grain and fruits, and so was viewed as the source of fertility and productiveness. Rich crops and abundant harvests were interpreted as manifestations of her favor, while drought and famine were viewed as tokens of her displeasure. Demeter was worshipped by the Romans under the name of Ceres.

Dionysus (also called Bacchus) was the son of Zeus and Semele. He was the god of wine, and the introducer and promoter of the cultivation of the vine. As the god of wine, he was regarded as the giver of joy and the banisher of sorrow. As the protector of the vine, he came to be viewed as the patron of agriculture and the promoter of the peaceful arts of civilized life. He also presided over the dramatic art.

TO

My Children,

ROSE, MAURICE, AND MARY,

A LITTLE PRESENT OF OLD GREEK FAIRY TALES.

P R E F A C E.

MY DEAR CHILDREN:—Some of you have heard already of the old Greeks; and all of you, as you grow up, will hear more and more of them. Those of you who are boys will, perhaps, spend a great deal of time in reading Greek books; and the girls, though they may not learn Greek, will be sure to come across a great many stories taken from Greek history, and to see, I may say, every day, things which we should not have had if it had not been for these old Greeks. You can hardly find a well-written book which has not in it Greek names, and words, and proverbs; you cannot walk through a great town without passing Greek buildings; you cannot go into a well-furnished room without seeing Greek statues and ornaments, even Greek patterns of furniture and paper; so strangely have these old Greeks left their mark behind them upon this modern world in which we now live. And as you grow up, and read more and more, you will find that we owe to these old Greeks the beginnings of all our mathematics and geometry, — that is, the science and knowledge of numbers, and of the shapes of things, and of the forces which make things move and stand at rest; and the beginnings of our geography and astronomy; and of our laws, and freedom, and politics, — that is, the science of how to rule a country, and make it peaceful and strong. And we owe to them, too, the beginning of our logic, — that is, the study of words and of reasoning; and of our metaphysics,—that is, the study of our own thoughts and souls. And last of all, they made their language so beautiful that foreigners used to take it instead of their own; and at last Greek became the common language of educated people all over the old world, from Persia and Egypt even to Spain and Britain. And therefore it was that the New Testament was written in Greek, that it might be read and understood by all the nations of the Roman empire; so that next to the Jews, and the Bible which the Jews handed down to us, we owe more to these old Greeks than to any people upon earth.

Now you must remember one thing, that “Greeks” was not their real name. They called themselves always “Hellens,” but the Romans miscalled them Greeks; and we have taken that wrong name from the Romans; it would take a long time to tell you why. They were made up of many tribes and many small separate states; and when you hear in this book of Minyæ, and Athenians, and other such names, you must remember that they were all different tribes and peoples of the one great Hellen race, who lived in what we now call Greece, in the islands of the Archipelago, and along the coast of Asia Minor (Ionia, as they call it), from the Hellespont to Rhodes, and had afterwards colonies and cities in Sicily, and South Italy (which was called Great Greece), and along the shores of the Black Sea, at Sinope, and Kertch, and at Sebastopol. And after that, again, they spread under Alexander the Great, and conquered Egypt, and Syria, and Persia, and the whole East. But that was many a hundred years after my stories; for then there were no Greeks on the Black Sea shores, nor in Sicily, or Italy, or anywhere but in Greece and in Ionia. And if you are puzzled by the names of places in this book, you must take the maps and find them out. It will be a pleasanter way of learning geography than out of a dull lesson-book.

Now, I love these old Hellens heartily ; and I should be very ungrateful to them if I did not, considering all that they have taught me ; and they seem to me like brothers, though they have all been dead and gone many a hundred years ago. So, as you must learn about them, whether you choose or not, I wish to be the first to introduce you to them, and to say, "Come hither, children, at this blessed Christmas time, when all God's creatures should rejoice together, and bless Him who redeemed them all. Come and see old friends of mine, whom I knew long ere you were born. They are come to visit us at Christmas, out of the world where all live to God : and to tell you some of their old fairy-tales which they loved when they were young like you."

For nations begin at first by being children like you, though they are made up of grown men. They are children at first like you, — men and women with children's hearts ; frank, and affectionate, and full of trust, and teachable, and loving to see and learn all the wonders around them ; and greedy also, too often, and passionate and silly, as children are.

Thus these old Greeks were teachable, and learnt from all the nations round. From the Phœnicians they learnt ship-building, and some say letters beside ; and from the Assyrians they learnt painting and carving, and building in wood and stone ; and from the Egyptians they learnt astronomy, and many things which you would not understand. In this they were like our own forefathers, the Northmen, of whom you love to hear, who, though they were wild and rough themselves, were humble, and glad to learn from every one. Therefore God rewarded these Greeks as He rewarded our forefathers, and made them wiser than the people who taught them, in everything they learnt; for He loves to see men and children open-hearted, and willing to be taught; and to him who uses what he has got, He gives more and more day by day. So these Greeks grew wise and powerful, and wrote poems which will live till the world's end, which you must read for yourselves some day, in English at least, if not in Greek. And they learnt to carve statues, and build temples, which are still among the wonders of the world; and many another wondrous thing God taught them, for which we are the wiser this day.

For you must not fancy, children, that because these old Greeks were heathens, therefore God did not care for them, and taught them nothing.

The Bible tells us that it was not so, but that God's mercy is over all his works, and that He understands the hearts of all people, and fashions all their works. And St. Paul told these old Greeks in aftertimes, when they had grown wicked and fallen low, that they ought to have known better, because they were God's offspring, as their own poets had said; and that the good God had put them where they were to seek the Lord, and feel after him, and find him, though He was not far from any one of them. And Clement of Alexandria, a great Father of the Church, who was as wise as he was good, said that God had sent down Philosophy to the Greeks from heaven, as he sent down the Gospel to the Jews.

For Jesus Christ, remember, is the Light who lights every man who comes into the world. And no one can think a right thought, or feel a right feeling, or understand the real truth of anything in earth and heaven, unless the good Lord Jesus teaches him by his Spirit, which gives man understanding.

But these Greeks, as St. Paul told them, forgot what God had taught them, and though they were God's offspring, worshipped idols of wood and stone, and fell at last into sin and shame, and then of course into cowardice and slavery, till they perished out of that beautiful land which God had given them for so many years.

For, like all nations who have left anything behind them beside mere mounds of earth, they believed at first in the One True God who made all heaven and earth. But after a while, like all other nations, they began to worship other gods, or rather angels and spirits, who (so they fancied) lived about their land. Zeus,¹ the Father of gods and men (who was some dim remembrance of the blessed true God), and Hera¹ his wife, and Phœbus Apollo¹ the Sun-god, and Pallas Athene,¹ who taught men wisdom and useful arts, and Aphrodite¹ the Queen of Beauty, and Poseidon¹ the Ruler of the Sea, and Hephæstus¹ the King of the Fire, who taught men to work in metals. And they honored the Gods of the Rivers and the Nymph-maids,² who they fancied lived in the caves, and the fountains, and the glens of the forest, and all beautiful wild places. And they honored the Erinyes, the dreadful sisters who, they thought, haunted guilty men until their sins were purged away. And many other dreams they had, which parted the One God into many; and they said too that these gods did things which would be a shame and sin for any man to do. And when their philosophers arose and told them that God was One, they would not listen, but loved their idols and their wicked idol feasts till they all came to ruin. But we will talk of such sad things no more.

¹ See the "Descriptive Table of Greek Divinities," p. v.

² Nymphs are goddesses of inferior rank having the form of beautiful maidens. They are associated with special places, and take their name from the places or natural objects over which they preside. Thus there are wood-nymphs, fountain-nymphs, sea-nymphs, meadow-nymphs, mountain-nymphs, etc.

But at the time of which this little book speaks they had not fallen as low as that. They worshipped no idols, as far as I can find ; and they still believed in the last six of the ten commandments, and knew well what was right and what was wrong. And they believed (and that was what gave them courage) that the gods loved men and taught them, and that without the gods men were sure to come to ruin. And in that they were right enough, as we know, — more right even than they thought ; for without God we can do nothing, and all wisdom comes from him.

Now you must not think of them in this book as learned men, living in great cities, such as they were afterwards when they wrought all their beautiful works, but as country people, living in farms and walled villages, in a simple, hard-working way ; so that the greatest kings and heroes cooked their own meals and thought it no shame, and made their own ships and weapons, and fed and harnessed their own horses ; and the queens worked with their maid-servants, and did all the business of the house, and spun, and wove, and embroidered, and made their husbands' clothes and their own. So that a man was honored among them, not because he happened to be rich, but according to his skill, and his strength, and courage, and the number of things which he could do. For they were but grown-up children, though they were right noble children too ; and it was with them as it is now at school, the strongest and cleverest boy, though he be poor, leads all the rest.

Now while they were young and simple they loved fairy tales, as you do now. All nations do so when they are young ; our old forefathers did, and called their stories

"Sagas." I will read you some of them some day, — some of the Eddas,¹ and the Völuspá,² and Beowulf,³ and the noble old Romances. The old Arabs again had their tales, which we now call "The Arabian Nights." The old Romans had theirs, and they called them "Fabulæ," from which our word "fable" comes; but the old Hellens called theirs "Mythoi," from which our new word "myth" is taken. But next to those old Romances, which were written in the Christian middle age, there are no fairy tales like these old Greek ones for beauty, and wisdom, and truth, and for making children love noble deeds, and trust in God to help them through.

Now why have I called this book "The Heroes"? Because that was the name which the Hellens gave to men who were brave, and skilful, and dare do more than other men. At first, I think, that was all it meant; but after a time it came to mean something more: it came to mean men who helped their country; men, in those old times when the country was half wild, who killed fierce beasts and evil men, and drained swamps, and founded towns, and therefore after they were dead were honored because they had left their country better than they found it. And we call such a man a hero in English to this day, and call it a "heroic" thing to suffer pain and grief that we may do good to our fellow-men. We may all do that, my children, boys and girls alike; and we ought to do it, for it is easier now than ever, and safer, and the path more clear. But you shall hear how the Hellens said their heroes worked three thousand years ago. The stories are not all true, of course, nor half of them; you are not simple enough to fancy that; but the meaning of them is true, and true forever, and that is, — “Do right, and God will help you.”

¹ Two ancient collections of Scandinavian sagas, one in poetry, the other chiefly in prose, illustrating the mythology of the northern nations.

² An old Norse poem which forms a part of the older Edda; it gives an account of the creation and destruction of the world.

³ A celebrated Anglo-Saxon epic poem recounting the exploits of a semi-fabulous hero, Beowulf (Be-o'wulf).

FARLEY COURT,
Advent, 1855.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
PREFATORY NOTE	iii
DESCRIPTIVE TABLE OF GREEK DIVINITIES	v
AUTHOR'S PREFACE	ix

STORY I.—PERSEUS.

PART I.—HOW PERSEUS AND HIS MOTHER CAME TO SERIPHUS	I
II.—HOW PERSEUS VOWED A RASH VOW	6
III.—HOW PERSEUS SLEW THE GORGON	17
IV.—HOW PERSEUS CAME TO THE ÆTHIOPS	27
V.—HOW PERSEUS CAME HOME AGAIN	39

STORY II.—THE ARGONAUTS.

PART I.—HOW THE CENTAUR TRAINED THE HEROES ON PELION	47
II.—HOW JASON LOST HIS SANDAL IN ANAURUS	57
III.—HOW THEY BUILT THE SHIP ARGO IN IOLCUS	66
IV.—HOW THE ARGONAUTS SAILED TO COLCHIS	71
V.—HOW THE ARGONAUTS WERE DRIVEN INTO THE UNKNOWN SEA	95
VI.—WHAT WAS THE END OF THE HEROES	120

STORY III. — THESEUS.

	PAGE
PART I. — HOW THESEUS LIFTED THE STONE . . .	125
II. — HOW THESEUS SLEW THE DEVOURERS OF MEN .	130
III. — HOW THESEUS SLEW THE MINOTAUR . . .	155
IV. — HOW THESEUS FELL BY HIS PRIDE . . .	160

STORY I.—PERSEUS.

STORY I. — PERSEUS.

PART I.

HOW PERSEUS AND HIS MOTHER CAME TO SERIPHUS.

ONCE upon a time there were two princes who were twins. Their names were Acrisius and Proetus, and they lived in the pleasant vale of Argos, far away in Hellas. They had fruitful meadows and vineyards, sheep and oxen, great herds of horses feeding down in Lerna Fen, and all that men could need to make them blest ; and yet they were wretched, because they were jealous of each other. From the moment they were born they began to quarrel ; and when they grew up, each tried to take away the other's share of the kingdom, and keep all for himself. So, first Acrisius drove out Proetus ; and he went across the seas, and brought home a foreign princess for his wife, and foreign warriors to help him, who were called Cyclopes¹ ; and drove out Acrisius in his turn ; and then they fought a long while up and down the land, till the quarrel was settled ; and Acrisius took Argos and one-half the land, and Proetus took Tiryns and the other half. And Proetus and his Cyclopes built around Tiryns great walls of unhewn stone, which are standing to this day.

But there came a prophet to that hard-hearted Acrisius, and prophesied against him, and said: "Because you have risen up against your own blood, your own blood shall rise up against you; because you have sinned against your kindred, by your kindred you shall be punished. Your daughter Danae shall bear a son, and by that son's hand you shall die. So the gods have ordained, and it will surely come to pass."

¹ A Thracian tribe, not to be confounded with the one-eyed giants mentioned later.

And at that Acrisius was very much afraid; but he did not mend his ways. He had been cruel to his own family; and, instead of repenting and being kind to them, he went on to be more cruel than ever; for he shut up his fair daughter Danae in a cavern underground, lined with brass, that no one might come near her. So he fancied himself more cunning than the gods; but you will see presently whether he was able to escape them.

Now it came to pass that in time Danae bore a son; so beautiful a babe that any but King Acrisius would have had pity on it. But he had no pity. For he took Danae and her babe down to the sea-shore, and put them into a great chest, and thrust them out to sea, for the winds and the waves to carry them whithersoever they would.

The north-west wind blew freshly out of the blue mountains, and down the pleasant vale of Argos, and away and out to sea. And away and out to sea before it floated the mother and her babe, while all who watched them wept, save that cruel father, King Acrisius.

So they floated on and on, and the chest danced up and down upon the billows, and the baby slept upon its mother's breast; but the poor mother could not sleep, but watched and wept, and she sang to her baby as they floated; and the song which she sang you shall learn yourself some day.

And now they are past the last blue headland, and in the open sea; and there is nothing round them but the waves, and the sky, and the wind. But the waves are gentle, and the sky is clear, and the breeze is tender and low; for these are the days when Halcyone and Ceyx build their nests, and no storms ever ruffle the pleasant summer sea.

GREEK HEROES. — PAGE 2.

And who were Halcyone and Ceyx? You shall hear while the chest floats on. Halcyone was a fairy maiden, the daughter of the beach and of the wind. And she loved a sailor boy, and married him; and none on earth were so happy as they. But at last Ceyx was wrecked; and before he could swim to the shore, the billows swallowed him up. And Halcyone saw him drowning, and leapt into the sea to him; but in vain. Then the Immortals took pity on them both, and changed them into two fair sea-birds; and now they build a floating nest every year, and sail up and down happily forever, upon the pleasant seas of Greece.

So a night passed and a day; and a long day it was for Danae; and another night and day beside, till Danae was faint with hunger and weeping, and yet no land appeared. And all the while the babe slept quietly; and at last poor Danae dropped her head and fell asleep likewise, with her cheek against her babe's.

After a while she awakened suddenly; for the chest was jarring and grinding, and the air was full of sound. She looked up, and over her head were mighty cliffs, all red in the setting sun, and around her rocks and breakers, and flying flakes of foam. She clasped her hands together, and shrieked aloud for help. And when she cried, help met her; for now there came over the rocks a tall and stately man, and looked down wondering upon poor Danae tossing about in the chest among the waves.

He wore a rough cloak of frieze, and on his head a broad hat to shade his face; in his hand he carried a trident for spearing fish, and over his shoulder was a casting-net; but Danae could see that he was no common man by his stature, and his walk, and his flowing golden hair and beard; and by the two servants who came behind him, carrying baskets for his fish. But she had hardly time to look at him, before he had laid aside his trident, and leapt down the rocks, and thrown his casting-net so surely over Danae and the chest, that he drew it, and her, and the baby, safe upon a ledge of rock.

Then the fisherman took Danae by the hand, and lifted her out of the chest, and said:—

“O, beautiful damsel, what strange chance has brought you to this island in so frail a ship? Who are you, and whence? Surely you are some king’s daughter; and this boy has somewhat more than mortal.”

And as he spoke, he pointed to the babe; for its face shone like the morning star.

But Danae only held down her head, and sobbed out:—

“Tell me to what land I have come, unhappy that I am; and among what men I have fallen?”

And he said: “This isle is called Seriphus, and I am a Hellen, and dwell in it. I am the brother of Polydectes the king; and men call me Dictys the netter, because I catch the fish of the shore.”

Then Danae fell down at his feet, and embraced his knees, and cried:—

“Oh, sir, have pity upon a stranger, whom a cruel doom has driven to your land; and let me live in your house as a servant; but treat me honorably, for I was once a king’s daughter, and this my boy (as you have truly said) is of no common race. I will not be a charge to you, or eat the bread of idleness; for I am more skilful in weaving and embroidery than all the maidens of my land."

And she was going on; but Dictys stopped her, and raised her up, and said:—

"My daughter, I am old, and my hairs are growing gray; while I have no children to make my home cheerful. Come with me, then, and you shall be a daughter to me and to my wife, and this babe shall be our grandchild. For I fear the gods, and show hospitality to all strangers; knowing that good deeds, like evil ones, always return to those who do them."

So Danae was comforted, and went home with Dictys the good fisherman, and was a daughter to him and to his wife, till fifteen years were past.

PART II.

HOW PERSEUS VOWED A RASH VOW.

FIFTEEN years were past and gone, and the babe was now grown to be a tall lad and a sailor, and went many voyages after merchandise to the islands round. His mother called him Perseus : but all the people in Seriphus said that he was not the son of mortal man, and called him the son of Zeus, the king of the Immortals. For though he was but fifteen, he was taller by a head than any man in the island ; and he was the most skilful of all in running and wrestling and boxing, and in throwing the quoit and the javelin, and in rowing with the oar, and in playing on the harp, and in all which befits a man. And he was brave and truthful, gentle and courteous, for good old Dictys had trained him well ; and well it was for Perseus that he had done so. For now Danae and her son fell into great danger, and Perseus had need of all his wit to defend his mother and himself.

I said that Dictys's brother was Polydectes, king of the island. He was not a righteous man, like Dictys : but greedy, and cunning, and cruel. And when he saw fair Danae, he wanted to marry her. But she would not ; for she did not love him, and cared for no one but her boy, and her boy's father, whom she never hoped to see again. At last Polydectes became furious ; and while Perseus was away at sea, he took poor Danae away from Dictys, saying, " If you will not be my wife, you shall be my slave." So Danae was made a slave, and had to fetch water from the well, and grind in the mill, and perhaps was beaten, and wore a heavy chain, because she would not marry that cruel king. But Perseus was far away over the seas in the isle of Samos, little thinking how his mother was languishing in grief.

Now one day at Samos, while the ship was lading, Perseus wandered into a pleasant wood to get out of the sun, and sat down on the turf, and fell asleep. And as he slept, a strange dream came to him ; the strangest dream which he had ever had in his life.

There came a lady to him through the wood, taller than he, or any mortal man : but beautiful exceedingly, with great gray eyes, clear and piercing, but strangely soft and mild. On her head was a helmet, and in her hand a spear. And over her shoulder, above her long blue robes, hung a goatskin, which bore up a mighty shield of brass, polished like a mirror. She stood and looked at him with her clear gray eyes ; and Perseus saw that her eyelids never moved, nor her eyeballs, but looked straight through and through him, and into his very heart, as if she could see all the secrets of his soul, and knew all that he had ever thought or longed for since the day that he was born. And Perseus dropped his eyes, trembling and blushing, as the wonderful lady spoke.

“Perseus, you must do an errand for me.”

“Who are you, lady ? and how do you know my name ?”

“I am Pallas Athene, and I know the thoughts of all men’s hearts, and discern their manhood or their baseness. And from the souls of clay I turn away ; and they are blest, but not by me. They fatten at ease like sheep in the pasture, and eat what they did not sow, like oxen in the stall. They grow and spread like the gourd along the ground ; but, like the gourd, they give no shade to the traveller; and when they are ripe death gathers them, and they go down unloved into hell, and their name vanishes out of the land.

"But to the souls of fire I give more fire, and to those who are manful I give a might more than man's. These are the heroes, the sons of the Immortals, who are blest, but not like the souls of clay. For I drive them forth by strange paths, Perseus, that they may fight the Titans¹ and the monsters, the enemies of gods and men. Through doubt and need, danger and battle, I drive them; and some of them are slain in the flower of youth, no man knows when or where; and some of them win noble names and a fair and green old age; but what will be their latter end I know not, and none save Zeus, the father of gods and men. Tell me now, Perseus, which of these two sorts of men seem to you more blest?"

Then Perseus answered boldly: "Better to die in the flower of youth, on the chance of winning a noble name, than to live at ease like the sheep, and die unloved and unrenowned."

Then that strange lady laughed, and held up her brazen shield, and cried, "See here, Perseus; dare you face such a monster as this and slay it, that I may place its head upon this shield?"

And in the mirror of the shield there appeared a face, and as Perseus looked on it his blood ran cold. It was the face of a beautiful woman; but her cheeks were pale as death, and her brows were knit with everlasting pain, and her lips were thin and bitter like a snake's; and instead of hair, vipers wreathed about her temples and shot out their forked tongues, while round her head were folded wings like an eagle's, and upon her bosom claws of brass.

¹ The Titans were a race of hostile divinities who had been vanquished by Zeus, and banished to the lower world. Several of them seem to have been personifications of the forces of nature.

And Perseus looked awhile, and then said, "If there is anything so fierce and foul on earth, it were a noble deed to kill it. Where can I find the monster?"

Then the strange lady smiled again, and said, "Not yet; you are too young and too unskilled; for this is Medusa the Gorgon,¹ the mother of a monstrous brood. Return to your home, and do the work which waits there for you. You must play the man in that before I can think you worthy to go in search of the Gorgon."

Then Perseus would have spoken, but the strange lady vanished, and he awoke; and behold, it was a dream. But day and night Perseus saw before him the face of that dreadful woman, with the vipers writhing round her head.

So he returned home; and when he came to Seriphus, the first thing which he heard was that his mother was a slave in the house of Polydectes.

Grinding his teeth with rage, he went out, and away to the king's palace, and through the men's rooms and the women's rooms, and so through all the house (for no one dared to stop him, so terrible and fair was he), till he found his mother sitting on the floor turning the stone hand-mill, and weeping as she turned it. And he lifted her up, and kissed her, and bade her follow him forth. But before they could pass out of the room, Polydectes came in raging. And when Perseus saw him, he flew upon him as the mastiff flies on the boar. "Villain and tyrant!" he cried; "is this your respect for the gods, and thy mercy to strangers and widows? You shall die!" And because he had no sword he caught up the stone hand-mill, and he lifted it to dash out Polydectes's brains.

¹ A Greek word, meaning the Grim One.

But his mother clung to him, shrieking, "Oh, my son, we are strangers and helpless in the land ; and if you kill the king, all the people will fall on us, and we shall both die."

Good Dictys, too, who had come in, entreated him. "Remember that he is my brother. Remember how I have brought you up, and trained you as my own son, and spare him for my sake."

Then Perseus lowered his hand ; and Polydectes, who had been trembling all this while like a coward, because he knew that he was in the wrong, let Perseus and his mother pass.

Perseus took his mother to the temple of Athene, and there the priestess made her one of the temple sweepers ; for there they knew she would be safe, and not even Polydectes would dare to drag her away from the altar. And there Perseus, and the good Dictys, and his wife, came to visit her every day ; while Polydectes, not being able to get what he wanted by force, cast about in his wicked heart how he might get it by cunning.

Now he was sure that he could never get back Danae as long as Perseus was in the island ; so he made a plot to rid himself of him. And first he pretended to have forgiven Perseus and to have forgotten Danae, so that for a while all went as smoothly as ever.

Next he proclaimed a great feast, and invited to it all the chiefs, and land-owners, and the young men of the island, and among them Perseus, that they might all do him homage as their king, and eat of his banquet in his hall.

On the appointed day they all came ; and, as the custom was then, each guest brought his present with him to the king ; one a horse, another a shawl, or a ring, or a sword ; and those who had nothing better brought a basket of grapes or of game; but Perseus brought nothing, for he had nothing to bring, being but a poor sailor lad.

He was ashamed, however, to go into the king's presence without his gift, and he was too proud to ask Dictys to lend him one. So he stood at the door sorrowfully, watching the rich men go in; and his face grew very red as they pointed at him, and smiled, and whispered, "What has that foundling to give?"

Now this was what Polydectes wanted; and as soon as he heard that Perseus stood without, he bade them bring him in, and asked him scornfully before them all, "Am I not your king, Perseus, and have I not invited you to my feast? Where is your present, then?"

Perseus blushed and stammered, while all the proud men round laughed, and some of them began jeering him openly. "This fellow was thrown ashore here like a piece of weed or drift wood, and yet he is too proud to bring a gift to the king."

"And though he does not know who his father is, he is vain enough to let the old women call him the son of Zeus."

And so forth, till poor Perseus grew mad with shame, and hardly knowing what he said, cried out, "A present! who are you who talk of presents? See if I do not bring a nobler one than all of yours together!"

So he said, boasting; and yet he felt in his heart that he was braver than all those scoffers, and more able to do some glorious deed.

"Hear him! Hear the boaster! What is it to be?" cried they all, laughing louder than ever.

Then his dream at Samos came into his mind, and he cried aloud, "The head of the Gorgon."

He was half afraid after he had said the words; for all laughed louder than ever, and Polydectes loudest of all.

"You have promised to bring me the Gorgon's head? Then never appear again in this island without it. Go!"

Perseus ground his teeth with rage, for he saw that he had fallen into a trap; but his promise lay upon him, and he went out without a word.

Down to the cliffs he went, and looked across the broad blue sea; and he wondered if his dream were true, and prayed in the bitterness of his soul.

"Pallas Athene, was my dream true? and shall I slay the Gorgon? If thou didst really show me her face, let me not come to shame as a liar and boastful. Rashly and angrily I promised: but cunningly and patiently will I perform."

But there was no answer, nor sign; neither thunder or any appearance; not even a cloud in the sky.

And three times Perseus called, weeping. "Rashly and angrily I promised: but cunningly and patiently will I perform."

Then he saw afar off above the sea a small white cloud, as bright as silver. And it came on, nearer and nearer, till its brightness dazzled his eyes.

Perseus wondered at that strange cloud, for there was no other cloud all around the sky; and he trembled as it touched the cliff below. And as it touched, it broke, and parted, and within it appeared Pallas Athene, as he had seen her at Samos in his dream, and beside her a young man more light-limbed than the stag, whose eyes were like sparks of fire. By his side was a scimitar of diamond, all of one clear precious stone, and on his feet were golden sandals, from the heels of which grew living wings.

They looked upon Perseus keenly, and yet they never moved their eyes; and they came up the cliffs towards him more swiftly than the sea-gull, and yet they never moved their feet, nor did the breeze stir the robes about their limbs; only the wings of the youth's sandals quivered, like a hawk's when he hangs above the cliff. And Perseus fell down and worshipped, for he knew that they were more than man.

But Athene stood before him and spoke gently, and bid him have no fear. Then, —

"Perseus," she said, "he who overcomes in one trial merits thereby a sharper trial still. You have braved Polydectes, and done manfully. Dare you brave Medusa the Gorgon?"

And Perseus said, "Try me; for since you spoke to me in Samos, a new soul has come into my breast, and I should be ashamed not to dare anything which I can do. Show me, then, how I can do this."

"Perseus," said Athene, "think well before you attempt; for this deed requires a seven years' journey, in which you cannot repent or turn back, nor escape; but if your heart fails you, you must die in the unshapen land, where no man will ever find your bones."

"Better so than live here, useless and despised," said Perseus. "Tell me, then, oh tell me, fair and wise Goddess, of your great kindness and condescension, how I can do but this one thing, and then, if need be, die!"

Then Athene smiled, and said, —

"Be patient, and listen; for if you forget my words, you will indeed die. You must go northward to the country of the Hyperboreans,¹ who live beyond the pole, at the sources of the cold north wind; till you find the three ¹ From two Greek words, meaning beyond, and the north wind, respectively.

Gray Sisters, who have but one eye and one tooth between them. You must ask them the way to the Nymphs, the daughters of the Evening Star, who dance about the golden tree, in the Atlantic island of the west. They will tell you the way to the Gorgon, that you may slay her, my enemy, the mother of monstrous beasts. Once she was a maiden as beautiful as morn, till in her pride she sinned a sin at which the sun hid his face; and from that day her hair was turned to vipers, and her hands to eagle's claws; and her heart was filled with shame and rage, and her lips with bitter venom; and her eyes became so terrible that whosoever looks on them is turned to stone; and her children are the winged horse, and the giant of the golden sword; and her grandchildren are Echidna¹ the witch-adder, and Geryon the three-headed tyrant, who feeds his herds beside the herds of hell. So she became the sister of the Gorgons, Stheno and Euryale the abhorred, the daughters of the Queen of the Sea. Touch them not, for they are immortal: but bring me only Medusa's head."

"And I will bring it!" said Perseus; "but how am I to escape her eyes? Will she not freeze me too into stone?"

"You shall take this polished shield," said Athene; "and when you come near her, look not at her herself, but at her image in the brass; so you may strike her safely. And when you have struck off her head, wrap it, with your face turned away, in the folds of the goat-skin on which the shield hangs, the hide of Amalthea,² the nurse of the Ægis-holder.³ So you will bring it safely back to me, and win to yourself renown and a place among tl heroes who feast with the Immortals upon the peak where no winds blow."

¹ A monster, half maiden and half serpent.

² The sacred goat with whose milk Zeus was fed in infancy on the island of Crete.

³ The ægis was the sacred shield of Zeus. As the ægis was a part of his regular armor, Zeus is often called, as here, the Ægis-holder.

Then Perseus said, "I will go, though I die in going. But how shall I cross the seas without a ship? And who will show me my way? And when I find her, how shall I slay her, if her scales be iron and brass?"

Then the young man spoke: "These sandals of mine will bear you across the seas, and over hill and dale like a bird, as they bear me all day long; for I am Hermes,¹ the far-famed Argus-slayer,² the messenger of the Immortals who dwell on Olympus."³

Then Perseus fell down and worshipped, while the young man spoke again.

"The sandals themselves will guide you on the road, for they are divine and cannot stray; and this sword itself, the Argus-slayer, will kill her, for it is divine, and needs no second stroke. Arise, and gird them on, and go forth."

So Perseus arose, and girded on the sandals and the sword.

And Athene cried, "Now leap from the cliff, and be gone."

But Perseus lingered.

"May I not bid farewell to my mother and to Dictys? And may I not offer burnt-offerings to you, and to Hermes, the far-famed Argus-slayer, and to Father Zeus above?"

"You shall not bid farewell to your mother, lest your heart relent at her weeping. I will comfort her and

¹ See the "Descriptive Table of Greek Divinities," p. v.

² Argus, who had a hundred eyes, was employed by Hera to watch Io, the latter having aroused Hera's jealousy. But Hermes, at the instigation of Zeus, slew Argus and delivered Io.

³ The highest peak of this mountain rises 9,754 feet above the level of the sea. Its cloud-wrapt summit, veiled from mortal eyes, seemed to the imaginative Greeks the natural dwelling-place of their gods.

Dictys until you return in peace. Nor shall you offer burnt-offerings to the Olympians; for your offering shall be Medusa's head. Leap, and trust in the armor of the Immortals."

Then Perseus looked down the cliff and shuddered; but he was ashamed to show his dread. Then he thought of Medusa and the renown before him, and he leaped into the empty air.

And behold, instead of falling he floated, and stood, and ran along the sky. He looked back, but Athene had vanished, and Hermes; and the sandals led him on northward ever, like a crane who follows the spring toward the Ister¹ fens.

¹ The modern Danube.

PART III.

HOW PERSEUS SLEW THE GORGON.

So Perseus started on his journey, going dry-shod over land and sea; and his heart was high and joyful, for the winged sandals bore him each day a seven days' journey.

And he went by Cythnus, and by Ceos, and the pleasant Cyclades to Attica; and past Athens, and Thebes, and the Copaic lake, and up the vale of Cephissus, and past the peaks of Cæta and Pindus, and over the rich Thessalian plains, till the sunny hills of Greece were behind him, and before him were the wilds of the north. Then he passed the Thracian mountains, and many a barbarous tribe, Pæons and Dardans and Triballi, till he came to the Ister stream, and the dreary Scythian plains. And he walked across the Ister dry-shod, and away through the moors and fens, day and night, toward the bleak northwest, turning neither to the right hand nor the left, till he came to the Unshapen Land, and the place which has no name.

And seven days he walked through it, on a path which few can tell; for those who have trodden it like least to speak of it, and those who go there again in dreams are glad enough when they awake; till he came to the edge of the everlasting night, where the air was full of feathers, and the soil was hard with ice; and there he found the three Gray Sisters, by the shore of the freezing sea, nodding upon a white log of drift-wood, beneath the cold, white, winter moon; and they chanted a low song together, "Why the old times were better than the new."

There was no living thing around them; not a fly, not a moss upon the rocks. Neither seal nor sea-gull dare come near, lest the ice should clutch them in its claws. The surge broke up in foam, but it fell again in flakes of snow; and it frosted the hair of the three Gray Sisters, and the bones in the ice-cliff above their heads. They passed the eye from one to the other, but for all that they could not see; and they passed the tooth from one to the other, but for all that they could not eat; and they sat in the full glare of the moon, but they were none the warmer for her beams. And Perseus pitied the three Gray Sisters; but they did not pity themselves.

So he said, "Oh, venerable mothers, wisdom is the daughter of old age. You, therefore, should know many things. Tell me, if you can, the path to the Gorgon."

Then one cried, "Who is this who reproaches us with old age?" And another, "This is the voice of one of the children of men."

And he, "I do not reproach, but honor your old age, and I am one of the sons of men and of the heroes. The rulers of Olympus have sent me to you to ask the way to the Gorgon."

Then one, — "There are new rulers in Olympus, and all new things are bad." And another, — "We hate your rulers, and all the children of men. We are the kindred of the Titans, and the Giants,¹ and the Gorgons, and the ancient monsters of the deep." And another, — "Who is this rash and insolent man, who pushes unbidden into our world?" And the first, — "There never was such a world as ours, nor will be; if we let him see it, he will spoil it all."

¹ The Giants were monsters, born from drops of blood that had fallen on the earth. They fought with Zeus and the other Olympian gods, but were defeated and slain. Some of them were buried under volcanic islands.

Then one cried, "Give me the eye, that I may see him"; and another, "Give me the tooth, that I may bite him." But Perseus, when he saw that they were foolish and proud, and did not love the children of men, left off pitying them, and said to himself, "Hungry men must needs be hasty; if I stay making many words here, I shall be starved." Then he stepped close to them, and watched till they passed the eye from hand to hand. And as they groped about between themselves, he held out his own hand gently, till one of them put the eye into it, fancying that it was the hand of her sister. Then he sprang back, and laughed, and cried, —

"Cruel and proud old women, I have your eye; and I will throw it into the sea, unless you tell me the path to the Gorgon, and swear to me that you tell me right."

Then they wept, and chattered, and scolded; but in vain. They were forced to tell the truth, though when they told it, Perseus could hardly make out the road.

"You must go," they said, "foolish boy, to the southward, into the ugly glare of the sun, till you come to Atlas the Giant, who holds the heaven and the earth apart. And you must ask his daughters, the Hesperides,¹ who are young and foolish like yourself. And now give us back our eye; for we have forgotten all the rest."

So Perseus gave them back their eye; but instead of using it, they nodded, and fell fast asleep, and were turned into blocks of ice, till the tide came up and washed them all away. And now they float up and down like icebergs forever, weeping whenever they meet the sunshine, and the fruitful summer, and the warm south wind, which fill young hearts with joy.

¹ Nymphs who dwelt in an island in the far west, where, assisted by the dragon Ladon, they guarded the golden apples that had been given to Hera at her marriage with Zeus.

But Perseus leaped away to the southward, leaving the snow and ice behind; past the isle¹ of the Hyperboreans, and the tin isles,² and the long Iberian³ shore; while the sun rose higher, day by day, upon a bright blue summer sea. And the terns and the sea-gulls swept laughing round his head, and called to him to stop and play, and the dolphins gambolled up as he passed, and offered to carry him on their backs. And all night long the sea-nymphs sang sweetly, and the Tritons⁴ blew upon their conchs, as they played round Galatea their queen, in her car of pearled shells. Day by day the sun rose higher, and leaped more swiftly into the sea at night, and more swiftly out of the sea at dawn; while Perseus skimmed over the billows like a sea-gull, and his feet were never wetted; and leapt on from wave to wave, and his limbs were never weary, till he saw, far away, a mighty mountain, all rose-red in the setting sun. Its feet were wrapped in forests, and its head in wreaths of cloud; and Perseus knew that it was Atlas, who holds the heavens and the earth apart.

He came to the mountain, and leapt on shore, and wandered upward among pleasant valleys, and waterfalls, and

¹ Iceland(?).

² The Cassiterides of the ancients, perhaps to be identified with the Scilly Islands, off the coast of Cornwall.

³ Iberia was the Greek name of Spain.

⁴ Marine divinities, having in the upper part of their bodies the form of a man, and in the lower the tail of a dolphin. They are represented with conchs or trumpet shells, by blowing which, at the command of Poseidon, they calm the sea.

tall trees, and strange ferns and flowers ; but there was no smoke rising from any glen, nor house, nor sign of man.

At last he heard sweet voices singing ; and he guessed that he was come to the garden of the Nymphs, the daughters of the Evening Star.¹

They sang like nightingales among the thickets, and Perseus stopped to hear their song ; but the words which they spoke he could not understand ; no, nor no man after him for many a hundred years. So he stepped forward and saw them dancing, hand in hand, around the charmed tree, which bent under its golden fruit ; and round the tree-foot was coiled the dragon, old Ladon the sleepless snake, who lies there forever, listening to the song of the maidens, blinking and watching with dry bright eyes.

Then Perseus stopped, not because he feared the dragon, but because he was bashful before those fair maids ; but when they saw him, they too stopped, and called to him with trembling voices, —

“Who are you? Are you Heracles² the mighty, who will come to rob our garden, and carry off our golden fruit?” And he answered, —

“I am not Heracles the mighty, and I want none of your golden fruit. Tell me, fair nymphs, the way which leads to the Gorgon, that I may go on my way and slay her.”

“Not yet, not yet, fair boy ; come dance with us around the tree, in the garden which knows no winter, the home of the south wind and the sun. Come hither and play with us awhile ; we have danced alone here for a thousand years, and our hearts are weary with longing for a play-fellow. So come, come, come !”

¹ The Hesperides are sometimes represented as the daughters, not of Atlas, but of Hesperus, the Evening star.

² The most famous of the heroes of antiquity. By the Romans he was called Hercules. One of the twelve labors imposed upon him was to seek out and bring away the golden apples from the garden of the Hesperides. He succeeded in his task through the aid of Atlas.

“I cannot dance with you, fair maidens, for I must do the errand of the Immortals. So tell me the way to the Gorgon, lest I wander and perish in the waves.”

Then they sighed, and wept, and answered :—

“The Gorgon ! she will freeze you into stone.”

“It is better to die like a hero than to live like an ox in a stall. The Immortals have lent me weapons, and they will give me wit to use them.”

Then they sighed again, and answered : “Fair boy, if you are bent on your own ruin, be it so. We know not the way to the Gorgon ; but we will ask the giant Atlas, above upon the mountain peak, the brother of our father, the silver Evening Star. He sits aloft, and sees across the ocean, and far away into the Unshapen Land.”

So they went up the mountain to Atlas, their uncle, and Perseus went up with them. And they found the giant kneeling, as he held the heavens and the earth apart.

They asked him, and he answered mildly, pointing to the sea-board with his mighty hand : “I can see the Gorgons lying on an island far away, but this youth can never come near them, unless he has the hat of darkness, which whosoever wears cannot be seen.”

Then cried Perseus, “Where is that hat, that I may find it ?”

But the giant smiled. “No living mortal can find that hat, for it lies in the depths of Hades,¹ in the regions of the dead. But my nieces are immortal, and they shall fetch it for you, if you will promise me one thing and keep your faith.”

¹ Originally the name of the god of the lower world, but later used, as here, to designate the lower world itself.

Then Perseus promised ; and the giant said : " When you come back with the head of Medusa, you shall show me the beautiful horror ; that I may lose my feeling and my breathing, and become a stone forever ; for it is weary labor for me to hold the heavens and the earth apart."

Then Perseus promised ; and the eldest of the nymphs went down, and into a dark cavern among the cliffs, out of which came smoke and thunder, for it was one of the mouths of Hell.

And Perseus and the nymphs sat down seven days, and waited trembling, till the nymph came up again ; and her face was pale, and her eyes dazzled with the light, for she had been long in the dreary darkness ; but in her hand was the magic hat.

Then all the nymphs kissed Perseus, and wept over him a long while ; but he was only impatient to be gone. And at last they put the hat upon his head, and he vanished out of their sight.

But Perseus went on boldly, past many an ugly sight, far away into the heart of the Unshapen Land, beyond the streams of Ocean, to the isles where no ship cruises, where is neither night nor day, where nothing is in its right place, and nothing has a name ; till he heard the rustle of the Gorgons' wings, and saw the glitter of their brazen talons ; and then he knew that it was time to halt, lest Medusa should freeze him into stone.

He thought awhile with himself, and remembered Athene's words. He rose aloft into the air, and held the mirror of the shield above his head, and looked up into it that he might see all that was below him.

And he saw the three Gorgons sleeping, as huge as elephants. He knew that they could not see him, because the hat of darkness hid him ; and yet he trembled as he sank down near them, so terrible were those brazen claws.

Two of the Gorgons were foul as swine, and lay sleeping heavily, as swine sleep, with their mighty wings outspread; but Medusa tossed to and fro restlessly, and as she tossed, Perseus pitied her, she looked so fair and sad. Her plumage was like the rainbow, and her face was like the face of a nymph, only her eyebrows were knit, and her lips clenched, with everlasting care and pain; and her long neck gleamed so white in the mirror, that Perseus had not the heart to strike, and said: "Ah, that it had been either of her sisters!"

But as he looked, from among her tresses the vipers' heads awoke, and peeped up with their bright dry eyes, and showed their fangs, and hissed; and Medusa, as she tossed, threw back her wings, and showed her brazen claws; and Perseus saw that, for all her beauty, she was as foul and venomous as the rest.

Then he came down and stepped to her boldly, and looked steadfastly on his mirror, and struck with Harpe¹ stoutly once; and he did not need to strike again.

Then he wrapped the head in the goat-skin, turning away his eyes, and sprang into the air aloft, faster than he ever sprang before.

For Medusa's wings and talons rattled as she sank dead upon the rocks; and her two foul sisters woke, and saw her lying dead.

Into the air they sprang yelling, and looked for him who had done the deed. Thrice they swung round and round, like hawks who beat for a partridge; and thrice they snuffed round and round, like hounds who draw upon a deer. At last they struck upon the scent of the blood, and they checked for a moment to make sure; and then on they rushed with a fearful howl, while the wind rattled hoarse in their wings.

¹ The Greek name of the scimitar which Perseus had received from Hermes. (See p. 12.)

On they rushed, sweeping and flapping, like eagles after a hare; and Perseus's blood ran cold, for all his courage, as he saw them come howling on his track; and he cried: "Bear me well, now, brave sandals, for the hounds of Death are at my heels!"

And well the brave sandals bore him, aloft through cloud and sunshine, across the shoreless sea; and fast followed the hounds of Death, as the roar of their wings came down the wind. But the roar came down fainter and fainter, and the howl of their voices died away; for the sandals were too swift, even for Gorgons, and by nightfall they were far behind, two black specks in the southern sky, till the sun sank and he saw them no more.

Then he came again to Atlas, and the garden of the Nymphs; and when the giant heard him coming, he groaned, and said: "Fulfil thy promise to me." Then Perseus held up to him the Gorgon's head, and he had rest from all his toil; for he became a crag of stone, which sleeps forever far above the clouds.

Then he thanked the Nymphs, and asked them: "By what road shall I go homeward again, for I wandered far round in coming hither?"

And they wept and cried: "Go home no more, but stay and play with us, the lonely maidens, who dwell forever far away from gods and men."

But he refused, and they told him his road, and said: "Take with you this magic fruit, which, if you eat once, you will not hunger for seven days. For you must go eastward and eastward ever, over the doleful Libyan shore, which Poseidon gave to Father Zeus, when he burst open the Bosphorus and the Hellespont, and drowned the fair Lectonian land. And Zeus took that land in exchange, a fair bargain, much bad ground for a little good, and to this day it lies waste and desert, with shingle, and rock, and sand."

Then they kissed Perseus, and wept over him, and he leapt down the mountain, and went on, lessening and lessening like a sea-gull, away and out to sea.

PART IV.

HOW PERSEUS CAME TO THE ÆTHIOPS.

So Perseus flitted onward to the northeast over many a league of sea, till he came to the rolling sand-hills, and the dreary Libyan shore.

And he flitted on across the desert, over rock-ledges, and banks of shingle, and level wastes of sand, and shell-drifts bleaching in the sunshine, and the skeletons of great sea-monsters, and the dead bones of ancient giants, strewn up and down upon the old sea-floor. And as he went, the blood-drops fell to the earth from the Gorgon's head, and became poisonous asps and adders, which breed in the desert to this day.

Over the sands he went, he never knew how far or how long, feeding on the fruit which the Nymphs had given him, till he saw the hills of the Psylli,¹ and the Dwarfs who fought with cranes. Their spears were of reeds and rushes, and their houses of the egg-shells of the cranes; and Perseus laughed, and went his way to the northeast, hoping all day long to see the blue Mediterranean sparkling, that he might fly across it to his home.

But now came down a mighty wind, and swept him back southward toward the desert. All day long he strove against it; but even the winged sandals could not prevail. So he was forced to float down the wind all night; and when the morning dawned there was nothing to be seen save the same old hateful waste of sand.

¹ Ancient inhabitants of Cyrenaica.

And out of the north the sand-storms rushed upon him, blood-red pillars and wreaths, blotting out the noon-day sun ; and Perseus fled before them, lest he should be choked by the burning dust. At last the gale fell calm, and he tried to go northward again ; but again came down the sand-storms, and swept him back into the waste, and then all was calm and cloudless as before. Seven days he strove against the storms, and seven days he was driven back, till he was spent with thirst and hunger, and his tongue clove to the roof of his mouth. Here and there he fancied that he saw a fair lake, and the sunbeams shining on the water ; but when he came to it it vanished at his feet, and there was nought but burning sand. And if he had not been of the race of the Immortals, he would have perished in the waste ; but his life was strong within him, because it was more than man's.

Then he cried to Athene, and said, —

“Oh, fair and pure, if thou hearest me, wilt thou leave me here to die of drought ? I have brought thee the Gorgon's head at thy bidding, and hitherto thou hast prospered my journey ; dost thou desert me at the last ? Else why will not these immortal sandals prevail, even against the desert storms ? Shall I never see my mother more, and the blue ripple round Seriphus, and the sunny hills of Hellas ?”

So he prayed ; and after he had prayed there was a great silence.

The heaven was still above his head and the sand was still beneath his feet ; and Perseus looked up, but there was nothing but the blinding sun in the blinding blue ; and around him, but there was nothing but the blinding sand.

And Perseus stood still awhile, and waited, and said,

"Surely I am not here without the will of the Immortals, for Athene will not lie. Were not these sandals to lead me in the right road? Then the road in which I have tried to go must be a wrong road."

Then suddenly his ears were opened, and he heard the sound of running water.

And at that his heart was lifted up, though he scarcely dare believe his ears; and weary as he was, he hurried forward, though he could scarcely stand upright; and within a bowshot of him was a glen in the sand, and marble rocks, and date trees, and a lawn of gay green grass. And through the lawn a streamlet sparkled and wandered out beyond the trees, and vanished in the sand.

The water trickled among the rocks, and a pleasant breeze rustled in the dry date branches; and Perseus laughed for joy, and leapt down the cliff, and drank of the cool water, and ate of the dates, and slept upon the turf, and leapt up and went forward again; but not toward the north this time, for he said, "Surely Athene has sent me hither, and will not have me go homeward yet. What if there be another noble deed to be done, before I see the sunny hills of Hellas?"

So he went east, and east forever, by fresh oases, and fountains, date-palms, and lawns of grass, till he saw before him a mighty mountain-wall, all rose-red in the setting sun.

Then he towered in the air like an eagle, for his limbs were strong again; and he flew all night across the mountain till the day began to dawn, and rosy-fingered Eos¹ came blushing up the sky. And then, behold, beneath him was the long green garden of Egypt, and the shining stream of Nile.

¹ Goddess of the dawn; corresponds to the Latin Aurora.

And he saw cities walled up to heaven, and temples, and obelisks, and pyramids, and giant gods of stone. And he came down amid fields of barley, and flax, and millet, and clambering gourds ; and saw the people coming out of the gates of a great city, and setting to work, each in his place, among the watercourses, parting the streams among the plants cunningly with their feet, according to the wisdom of the Egyptians. But when they saw him they all stopped their work, and gathered round him, and cried, —

“Who art thou, fair youth, and what bearest thou beneath thy goat-skin there? Surely thou art one of the Immortals ; for thy skin is white like ivory, and ours is red like clay. Thy hair is like threads of gold, and ours is black and curled. Surely thou art one of the Immortals ;” — and they would have worshipped him then and there, but Perseus said, —

“I am not one of the Immortals, but I am a hero of the Hellens. And I have slain the Gorgon in the wilderness, and bear her head with me. Give me food, therefore, that I may go forward and finish my work.”

Then they gave him food, and fruit, and wine, but they would not let him go. And when the news came into the city that the Gorgon was slain, the priests came out to meet him, and the maidens, with songs and dances, and timbrels and harps ; and they would have brought him to their temple and to their king ; but Perseus put on the hat of darkness, and vanished away out of their sight.

Therefore the Egyptians looked long for his return, but in vain, and worshipped him as a hero, and made a statue of him in Chemmis, which stood for many a hundred years ; and they said that he appeared to them at times with sandals a cubit long ; and that whenever he appeared,

1. The first part of the paper is devoted to a general discussion of the problem of the existence of a solution of the system of equations (1) for arbitrary values of the parameters α and β .

2. In the second part, the problem of the existence of a solution of the system of equations (1) for arbitrary values of the parameters α and β is solved for the case of a linear system of equations.

3. In the third part, the problem of the existence of a solution of the system of equations (1) for arbitrary values of the parameters α and β is solved for the case of a nonlinear system of equations.

4. In the fourth part, the problem of the existence of a solution of the system of equations (1) for arbitrary values of the parameters α and β is solved for the case of a system of equations with a variable coefficient.

5. In the fifth part, the problem of the existence of a solution of the system of equations (1) for arbitrary values of the parameters α and β is solved for the case of a system of equations with a variable coefficient.

6. In the sixth part, the problem of the existence of a solution of the system of equations (1) for arbitrary values of the parameters α and β is solved for the case of a system of equations with a variable coefficient.

7. In the seventh part, the problem of the existence of a solution of the system of equations (1) for arbitrary values of the parameters α and β is solved for the case of a system of equations with a variable coefficient.

GREEK HEROES.—PAGE 31.

the season was fruitful, and the Nile rose high that year.

Then Perseus went to the eastward, along the Red Sea shore; and then, because he was afraid to go into the Arabian deserts, he turned northward once more, and this time no storm hindered him.

He went past the Isthmus,¹ and Mount Casius, and the vast Serbonian bog, and up the shore of Palestine, where the dark-faced Æthiops dwelt.

He flew on past pleasant hills and valleys, like Argos itself, or Lacedæmon, or the fair Vale of Tempe. But the lowlands were all drowned by floods, and the highlands blasted by fire, and the hills heaved like a bubbling cauldron before the wrath of King Poseidon, the shaker of the earth.

And Perseus feared to go inland, but flew along the shore above the sea; and he went on all the day, and the sky was black with smoke: and he went on all the night, and the sky was red with flame.

And at the dawn of day he looked toward the cliffs; and at the water's edge, under a black rock, he saw a white image stand.

"This," thought he, "must surely be the statue of some sea-god; I will go near and see what kinds of gods these barbarians worship."

So he came near; but when he came, it was no statue, but a maiden of flesh and blood; for he could see her tresses streaming in the breeze, and as he came closer still, he could see how she shrank and shivered when the waves sprinkled her with cold salt spray. Her arms were spread above her head, and fastened to the rock with chains of brass; and her head drooped on her bosom, sank down near them, so terrible were those brazen claws.

¹ Isthmus of Suez.

Two of the Gorgons were foul as swine, and lay sleeping heavily, as swine sleep, with their mighty wings outspread ; but Medusa tossed to and fro restlessly, and as she tossed, Perseus pitied her, she looked so fair and sad. Her plumage was like the rainbow, and her face was like the face of a nymph, only her eyebrows were knit, and her lips clenched, with everlasting care and pain ; and her long neck gleamed so white in the mirror, that Perseus had not the heart to strike, and said : " Ah, that it had been either of her sisters ! "

But as he looked, from among her tresses the vipers' heads awoke, and peeped up with their bright dry eyes, and showed their fangs, and hissed ; and Medusa, as she tossed, threw back her wings, and showed her brazen claws ; and Perseus saw that, for all her beauty, she was as foul and venomous as the rest.

Then he came down and stept to her boldly, and looked steadfastly on his mirror, and struck with Harpe¹ stoutly once ; and he did not need to strike again.

Then he wrapped the head in the goat-skin, turning away his eyes, and sprang into the air aloft, faster than he ever sprang before.

For Medusa's wings and talons rattled as she sank dead upon the rocks ; and her two foul sisters woke, and saw her lying dead.

Into the air they sprang yelling, and looked for him who had done the deed. Thrice they swung round and round, like hawks who beat for a partridge ; and thrice they snuffed round and round, like hounds who draw upon a deer. At last they struck upon the scent of the blood, and they checked for a moment to make sure; and then on they rushed with a fearful howl, while the wind rattled hoarse in their wings.

¹ The Greek name of the scimitar which Perseus had received from Hermes. (See p. 12.)

On they rushed, sweeping and flapping, like eagles after a hare; and Perseus's blood ran cold, for all his courage, as he saw them come howling on his track; and he cried: "Bear me well, now, brave sandals, for the hounds of Death are at my heels!"

And well the brave sandals bore him, aloft through cloud and sunshine, across the shoreless sea; and fast followed the hounds of Death, as the roar of their wings came down the wind. But the roar came down fainter and fainter, and the howl of their voices died away; for the sandals were too swift, even for Gorgons, and by nightfall they were far behind, two black specks in the southern sky, till the sun sank and he saw them no more.

Then he came again to Atlas, and the garden of the Nymphs; and when the giant heard him coming, he groaned, and said: "Fulfil thy promise to me." Then Perseus held up to him the Gorgon's head, and he had rest from all his toil; for he became a crag of stone, which sleeps forever far above the clouds.

Then he thanked the Nymphs, and asked them: "By what road shall I go homeward again, for I wandered far round in coming hither?"

And they wept and cried: "Go home no more, but stay and play with us, the lonely maidens, who dwell forever far away from gods and men."

But he refused, and they told him his road, and said: "Take with you this magic fruit, which, if you eat once, you will not hunger for seven days. For you must go eastward and eastward ever, over the doleful Libyan shore, which Poseidon gave to Father Zeus, when he burst open the Bosphorus and the Hellespont, and drowned the fair Lectonian land. And Zeus took that land in exchange, a fair bargain, much bad ground for a little good, and to this day it lies waste and desert, with shingle, and rock, and sand."

Then they kissed Perseus, and wept over him; and he leapt down the mountain, and went on, lessening and lessening like a sea-gull, away and out to sea.

PART IV.

HOW PERSEUS CAME TO THE ÆTHIOPS.

So Perseus flitted onward to the northeast over many a league of sea, till he came to the rolling sand-hills, and the dreary Libyan shore.

And he flitted on across the desert, over rock-ledges, and banks of shingle, and level wastes of sand, and shell-drifts bleaching in the sunshine, and the skeletons of great sea-monsters, and the dead bones of ancient giants, strewn up and down upon the old sea-floor. And as he went, the blood-drops fell to the earth from the Gorgon's head, and became poisonous asps and adders, which breed in the desert to this day.

Over the sands he went, he never knew how far or how long, feeding on the fruit which the Nymphs had given him, till he saw the hills of the Psylli,¹ and the Dwarfs who fought with cranes. Their spears were of reeds and rushes, and their houses of the egg-shells of the cranes; and Perseus laughed, and went his way to the northeast, hoping all day long to see the blue Mediterranean sparkling, that he might fly across it to his home.

But now came down a mighty wind, and swept him back southward toward the desert. All day long he strove against it; but even the winged sandals could not prevail. So he was forced to float down the wind all night; and when the morning dawned there was nothing to be seen save the same old hateful waste of sand.

¹ Ancient inhabitants of Cyrenaica.

And out of the north the sand-storms rushed upon him, blood-red pillars and wreaths, blotting out the noon-day sun ; and Perseus fled before them, lest he should be choked by the burning dust. At last the gale fell calm, and he tried to go northward again ; but again came down the sand-storms, and swept him back into the waste, and then all was calm and cloudless as before. Seven days he strove against the storms, and seven days he was driven back, till he was spent with thirst and hunger, and his tongue clove to the roof of his mouth. Here and there he fancied that he saw a fair lake, and the sunbeams shining on the water ; but when he came to it it vanished at his feet, and there was nought but burning sand. And if he had not been of the race of the Immortals, he would have perished in the waste ; but his life was strong within him, because it was more than man's.

Then he cried to Athene, and said, —

“ Oh, fair and pure, if thou hearest me, wilt thou leave me here to die of drought ? I have brought thee the Gorgon's head at thy bidding, and hitherto thou hast prospered my journey ; dost thou desert me at the last ? Else why will not these immortal sandals prevail, even against the desert storms ? Shall I never see my mother more, and the blue ripple round Seriphus, and the sunny hills of Hellas ? ”

So he prayed ; and after he had prayed there was a great silence.

The heaven was still above his head and the sand was still beneath his feet ; and Perseus looked up, but there was nothing but the blinding sun in the blinding blue ; and around him, but there was nothing but the blinding sand.

And Perseus stood still awhile, and waited, and said,

"Surely I am not here without the will of the Immortals, for Athene will not lie. Were not these sandals to lead me in the right road? Then the road in which I have tried to go must be a wrong road."

Then suddenly his ears were opened, and he heard the sound of running water.

And at that his heart was lifted up, though he scarcely dare believe his ears; and weary as he was, he hurried forward, though he could scarcely stand upright; and within a bowshot of him was a glen in the sand, and marble rocks, and date trees, and a lawn of gay green grass. And through the lawn a streamlet sparkled and wandered out beyond the trees, and vanished in the sand.

The water trickled among the rocks, and a pleasant breeze rustled in the dry date branches; and Perseus laughed for joy, and leapt down the cliff, and drank of the cool water, and ate of the dates, and slept upon the turf, and leapt up and went forward again; but not toward the north this time, for he said, "Surely Athene has sent me hither, and will not have me go homeward yet. What if there be another noble deed to be done, before I see the sunny hills of Hellas?"

So he went east, and east forever, by fresh oases, and fountains, date-palms, and lawns of grass, till he saw before him a mighty mountain-wall, all rose-red in the setting sun.

Then he towered in the air like an eagle, for his limbs were strong again; and he flew all night across the mountain till the day began to dawn, and rosy-fingered Eos¹ came blushing up the sky. And then, behold, beneath him was the long green garden of Egypt, and the shining stream of Nile.

¹ Goddess of the dawn; corresponds to the Latin Aurora.

And he saw cities walled up to heaven, and temples, and obelisks, and pyramids, and giant gods of stone. And he came down amid fields of barley, and flax, and millet, and clambering gourds; and saw the people coming out of the gates of a great city, and setting to work, each in his place, among the watercourses, parting the streams among the plants cunningly with their feet, according to the wisdom of the Egyptians. But when they saw him they all stopped their work, and gathered round him, and cried, —

“Who art thou, fair youth, and what bearest thou beneath thy goat-skin there? Surely thou art one of the Immortals; for thy skin is white like ivory, and ours is red like clay. Thy hair is like threads of gold, and ours is black and curled. Surely thou art one of the Immortals;” — and they would have worshipped him then and there, but Perseus said, —

“I am not one of the Immortals, but I am a hero of the Hellens. And I have slain the Gorgon in the wilderness, and bear her head with me. Give me food, therefore, that I may go forward and finish my work.”

Then they gave him food, and fruit, and wine, but they would not let him go. And when the news came into the city that the Gorgon was slain, the priests came out to meet him, and the maidens, with songs and dances, and timbrels and harps; and they would have brought him to their temple and to their king; but Perseus put on the hat of darkness, and vanished away out of their sight.

Therefore the Egyptians looked long for his return, but in vain, and worshipped him as a hero, and made a statue of him in Chemmis, which stood for many a hundred years; and they said that he appeared to them at times with sandals a cubit long; and that whenever he appeared, the season was fruitful, and the Nile rose high that year.

GREEK HEROES.—PAGE 31.

Then Perseus went to the eastward, along the Red Sea shore; and then, because he was afraid to go into the Arabian deserts, he turned northward once more, and this time no storm hindered him.

He went past the Isthmus,¹ and Mount Casius, and the vast Serbonian bog, and up the shore of Palestine, where the dark-faced Æthiops dwelt.

He flew on past pleasant hills and valleys, like Argos itself, or Lacedæmon, or the fair Vale of Tempe. But the lowlands were all drowned by floods, and the highlands blasted by fire, and the hills heaved like a bubbling cauldron before the wrath of King Poseidon, the shaker of the earth.

And Perseus feared to go inland, but flew along the shore above the sea; and he went on all the day, and the sky was black with smoke: and he went on all the night, and the sky was red with flame.

And at the dawn of day he looked toward the cliffs; and at the water's edge, under a black rock, he saw a white image stand.

"This," thought he, "must surely be the statue of some sea-god; I will go near and see what kinds of gods these barbarians worship."

So he came near; but when he came, it was no statue, but a maiden of flesh and blood; for he could see her tresses streaming in the breeze, and as he came closer still, he could see how she shrank and shivered when the waves sprinkled her with cold salt spray. Her arms were spread above her head, and fastened to the rock with chains of brass; and her head drooped on her bosom, sank down near them, so terrible were those brazen claws.

¹ Isthmus of Suez.

Two of the Gorgons were foul as swine, and lay sleeping heavily, as swine sleep, with their mighty wings outspread ; but Medusa tossed to and fro restlessly, and as she tossed, Perseus pitied her, she looked so fair and sad. Her plumage was like the rainbow, and her face was like the face of a nymph, only her eyebrows were knit, and her lips clenched, with everlasting care and pain ; and her long neck gleamed so white in the mirror, that Perseus had not the heart to strike, and said : " Ah, that it had been either of her sisters ! "

But as he looked, from among her tresses the vipers' heads awoke, and peeped up with their bright dry eyes, and showed their fangs, and hissed ; and Medusa, as she tossed, threw back her wings, and showed her brazen claws ; and Perseus saw that, for all her beauty, she was as foul and venomous as the rest.

Then he came down and stepped to her boldly, and looked steadfastly on his mirror, and struck with Harpe¹ stoutly once ; and he did not need to strike again.

Then he wrapped the head in the goat-skin, turning away his eyes, and sprang into the air aloft, faster than he ever sprang before.

For Medusa's wings and talons rattled as she sank dead upon the rocks ; and her two foul sisters woke, and saw her lying dead.

Into the air they sprang yelling, and looked for him who had done the deed. Thrice they swung round and round, like hawks who beat for a partridge ; and thrice they snuffed round and round, like hounds who draw upon a deer. At last they struck upon the scent of the blood, and they checked for a moment to make sure; and then on they rushed with a fearful howl, while the wind rattled hoarse in their wings.

¹ The Greek name of the scimitar which Perseus had received from Hermes. (See p. 12.)

On they rushed, sweeping and flapping, like eagles after a hare; and Perseus's blood ran cold, for all his courage, as he saw them come howling on his track; and he cried: "Bear me well, now, brave sandals, for the hounds of Death are at my heels!"

And well the brave sandals bore him, aloft through cloud and sunshine, across the shoreless sea; and fast followed the hounds of Death, as the roar of their wings came down the wind. But the roar came down fainter and fainter, and the howl of their voices died away; for the sandals were too swift, even for Gorgons, and by nightfall they were far behind, two black specks in the southern sky, till the sun sank and he saw them no more.

Then he came again to Atlas, and the garden of the Nymphs; and when the giant heard him coming, he groaned, and said: "Fulfil thy promise to me." Then Perseus held up to him the Gorgon's head, and he had rest from all his toil; for he became a crag of stone, which sleeps forever far above the clouds.

Then he thanked the Nymphs, and asked them: "By what road shall I go homeward again, for I wandered far round in coming hither?"

And they wept and cried: "Go home no more, but stay and play with us, the lonely maidens, who dwell forever far away from gods and men."

But he refused, and they told him his road, and said: "Take with you this magic fruit, which, if you eat once, you will not hunger for seven days. For you must go eastward and eastward ever, over the doleful Libyan shore, which Poseidon gave to Father Zeus, when he burst open the Bosphorus and the Hellespont, and drowned the fair Lectonian land. And Zeus took that land in exchange, a fair bargain, much bad ground for a little good, and to this day it lies waste and desert, with shingle, and rock, and sand."

Then they kissed Perseus, and wept over him, and he leapt down the mountain, and went on, lessening and lessening like a sea-gull, away and out to sea.

PART IV.

HOW PERSEUS CAME TO THE ÆTHIOPS.

So Perseus flitted onward to the northeast over many a league of sea, till he came to the rolling sand-hills, and the dreary Libyan shore.

And he flitted on across the desert, over rock-ledges, and banks of shingle, and level wastes of sand, and shell-drifts bleaching in the sunshine, and the skeletons of great sea-monsters, and the dead bones of ancient giants, strewn up and down upon the old sea-floor. And as he went, the blood-drops fell to the earth from the Gorgon's head, and became poisonous asps and adders, which breed in the desert to this day.

Over the sands he went, he never knew how far or how long, feeding on the fruit which the Nymphs had given him, till he saw the hills of the Psylli,¹ and the Dwarfs who fought with cranes. Their spears were of reeds and rushes, and their houses of the egg-shells of the cranes; and Perseus laughed, and went his way to the northeast, hoping all day long to see the blue Mediterranean sparkling, that he might fly across it to his home.

But now came down a mighty wind, and swept him back southward toward the desert. All day long he strove against it; but even the winged sandals could not prevail. So he was forced to float down the wind all night; and when the morning dawned there was nothing to be seen save the same old hateful waste of sand.

¹ Ancient inhabitants of Cyrenaica.

And out of the north the sand-storms rushed upon him, blood-red pillars and wreaths, blotting out the noon-day sun ; and Perseus fled before them, lest he should be choked by the burning dust. At last the gale fell calm, and he tried to go northward again ; but again came down the sand-storms, and swept him back into the waste, and then all was calm and cloudless as before. Seven days he strove against the storms, and seven days he was driven back, till he was spent with thirst and hunger, and his tongue clove to the roof of his mouth. Here and there he fancied that he saw a fair lake, and the sunbeams shining on the water ; but when he came to it it vanished at his feet, and there was nought but burning sand. And if he had not been of the race of the Immortals, he would have perished in the waste ; but his life was strong within him, because it was more than man's.

Then he cried to Athene, and said, —

“ Oh, fair and pure, if thou hearest me, wilt thou leave me here to die of drought ? I have brought thee the Gorgon's head at thy bidding, and hitherto thou hast prospered my journey ; dost thou desert me at the last ? Else why will not these immortal sandals prevail, even against the desert storms ? Shall I never see my mother more, and the blue ripple round Seriphus, and the sunny hills of Hellas ? ”

So he prayed ; and after he had prayed there was a great silence.

The heaven was still above his head and the sand was still beneath his feet ; and Perseus looked up, but there was nothing but the blinding sun in the blinding blue ; and around him, but there was nothing but the blinding sand.

And Perseus stood still awhile, and waited, and said,

“Surely I am not here without the will of the Immortals, for Athene will not lie. Were not these sandals to lead me in the right road? Then the road in which I have tried to go must be a wrong road.”

Then suddenly his ears were opened, and he heard the sound of running water.

And at that his heart was lifted up, though he scarcely dare believe his ears; and weary as he was, he hurried forward, though he could scarcely stand upright; and within a bowshot of him was a glen in the sand, and marble rocks, and date trees, and a lawn of gay green grass. And through the lawn a streamlet sparkled and wandered out beyond the trees, and vanished in the sand.

The water trickled among the rocks, and a pleasant breeze rustled in the dry date branches; and Perseus laughed for joy, and leapt down the cliff, and drank of the cool water, and ate of the dates, and slept upon the turf, and leapt up and went forward again; but not toward the north this time, for he said, “Surely Athene has sent me hither, and will not have me go homeward yet. What if there be another noble deed to be done, before I see the sunny hills of Hellas?”

So he went east, and east forever, by fresh oases, and fountains, date-palms, and lawns of grass, till he saw before him a mighty mountain-wall, all rose-red in the setting sun.

Then he towered in the air like an eagle, for his limbs were strong again; and he flew all night across the mountain till the day began to dawn, and rosy-fingered Eos¹ came blushing up the sky. And then, behold, beneath him was the long green garden of Egypt, and the shining stream of Nile.

¹ Goddess of the dawn; corresponds to the Latin Aurora.

And he saw cities walled up to heaven, and temples, and obelisks, and pyramids, and giant gods of stone. And he came down amid fields of barley, and flax, and millet, and clambering gourds ; and saw the people coming out of the gates of a great city, and setting to work, each in his place, among the watercourses, parting the streams among the plants cunningly with their feet, according to the wisdom of the Egyptians. But when they saw him they all stopped their work, and gathered round him, and cried, —

“Who art thou, fair youth, and what bearest thou beneath thy goat-skin there? Surely thou art one of the Immortals ; for thy skin is white like ivory, and ours is red like clay. Thy hair is like threads of gold, and ours is black and curled. Surely thou art one of the Immortals ;” — and they would have worshipped him then and there, but Perseus said, —

“I am not one of the Immortals, but I am a hero of the Hellens. And I have slain the Gorgon in the wilderness, and bear her head with me. Give me food, therefore, that I may go forward and finish my work.”

Then they gave him food, and fruit, and wine, but they would not let him go. And when the news came into the city that the Gorgon was slain, the priests came out to meet him, and the maidens, with songs and dances, and timbrels and harps ; and they would have brought him to their temple and to their king ; but Perseus put on the hat of darkness, and vanished away out of their sight.

Therefore the Egyptians looked long for his return, but in vain, and worshipped him as a hero, and made a statue of him in Chemmis, which stood for many a hundred years ; and they said that he appeared to them at times with sandals a cubit long ; and that whenever he appeared, the season was fruitful, and the Nile rose high that year.

Figure 1.1

GREEK HEROES.—PAGE 31.

Then Perseus went to the eastward, along the Red Sea shore; and then, because he was afraid to go into the Arabian deserts, he turned northward once more, and this time no storm hindered him.

He went past the Isthmus,¹ and Mount Casius, and the vast Serbonian bog, and up the shore of Palestine, where the dark-faced Æthiops dwelt.

He flew on past pleasant hills and valleys, like Argos itself, or Lacedæmon, or the fair Vale of Tempe. But the lowlands were all drowned by floods, and the highlands blasted by fire, and the hills heaved like a bubbling cauldron before the wrath of King Poseidon, the shaker of the earth.

And Perseus feared to go inland, but flew along the shore above the sea; and he went on all the day, and the sky was black with smoke: and he went on all the night, and the sky was red with flame.

And at the dawn of day he looked toward the cliffs; and at the water's edge, under a black rock, he saw a white image stand.

"This," thought he, "must surely be the statue of some sea-god; I will go near and see what kinds of gods these barbarians worship."

So he came near; but when he came, it was no statue, but a maiden of flesh and blood; for he could see her tresses streaming in the breeze, and as he came closer still, he could see how she shrank and shivered when the waves sprinkled her with cold salt spray. Her arms were spread above her head, and fastened to the rock with chains of brass; and her head drooped on her bosom,

¹ Isthmus of Suez.

So he threw off his helmet, and his cuirass, and all his clothes, and stood among the youths of Larissa, while all wondered at him, and said, "Who is this young stranger, who stands like a wild bull in his pride? Surely he is one of the heroes, the sons of the Immortals, from Olympus."

And when the games began, they wondered yet more; for Perseus was the best man of all, at running, and leaping, and wrestling, and throwing the javelin; and he won four crowns, and took them, and then he said to himself, "There is a fifth crown yet to be won; I will win that, and lay them all upon the knees of my grandfather."

And as he spoke, he saw where Acrisius sat, by the side of Teutamias the king, with his white beard flowing down upon his knees, and his royal staff in his hand; and Perseus wept when he looked at him, for his heart yearned after his kin; and he said, "Surely he is a kingly old man, yet he need not be ashamed of his grandson."

Then he took the quoits, and hurled them, five fathoms beyond all the rest; and the people shouted, "Further yet, brave stranger! There has never been such a hurler in this land."

Then Perseus put out all his strength, and hurled. But a gust of wind came from the sea, and carried the quoit aside, and far beyond all the rest; and it fell on the foot of Acrisius, and he swooned away with the pain.

Perseus shrieked, and ran up to him; but when they lifted the old man up, he was dead; for his life was slow and feeble.

Then Perseus rent his clothes, and cast dust upon his head, and wept a long while for his grandfather. At last he rose, and called to all the people aloud, and said, —

"The gods are true, and what they have ordained must be. I am Perseus, the grandson of this dead man, the far-famed slayer of the Gorgon."

Then he told them how the prophecy had declared that he should kill his grandfather, and all the story of his life.

So they made a great mourning for Acrisius, and burnt him on a right rich pile ; and Perseus went to the temple, and was purified from the guilt of the death, because he had done it unknowingly.

Then he went home to Argos, and reigned there well with fair Andromeda ; and they had four sons and three daughters, and died in a good old age.

And when they died, the ancients say, Athene took them up into the sky, with Cepheus and Cassiopea. And there on starlight nights you may see them shining still ; Cepheus with his kingly crown, and Cassiopea in her ivory chair, plaiting her star-spangled tresses, and Perseus with the Gorgon's head, and fair Andromeda beside him, spreading her long white arms across the heaven, as she stood when chained to the stone for the monster. All night long they shine, for a beacon to wandering sailors : but all day they feast with the gods, on the still blue peaks of Olympus.

Then Andromeda looked up at him, and new hope was kindled in her breast, so proud and fair did he stand, with one hand round her, and in the other the glittering sword. But she only sighed, and wept the more, and cried,—

“Why will you die, young as you are? Is there not death and sorrow enough in the world already? It is noble for me to die, that I may save the lives of a whole people; but you, better than them all, why should I slay you too? Go you your way; I must go mine.”

But Perseus cried,—“Not so; for the Lords of Olympus, whom I serve, are the friends of the heroes, and help them on to noble deeds. Led by them, I slew the Gorgon, the beautiful horror; and not without them do I come hither, to slay this monster with that same Gorgon’s head. Yet hide your eyes when I leave you, lest the sight of it freeze you too to stone.”

But the maiden answered nothing, for she could not believe his words. And then, suddenly looking up, she pointed to the sea, and shrieked,—

“There he comes, with the sunrise, as they promised. I must die now. How shall I endure it? Oh, go! Is it not dreadful enough to be torn piecemeal without having you to look on?” And she tried to thrust him away.

But he said,—“I go; yet promise me one thing ere I go; that if I slay this beast, you will be my wife, and come back with me to my kingdom in fruitful Argos, for I am a king’s heir. Promise me, and seal it with a kiss.”

Then she lifted up her face, and kissed him; and Perseus laughed for joy, and flew upward, while Andromeda crouched trembling on the rock, waiting for what might befall.

On came the great sea-monster, coasting along like a huge black galley, lazily breasting the ripple, and stopping at times by creek or headland, to watch for the laughter of girls at their bleaching, or cattle pawing on the sand-hills, or boys bathing on the beach. His great sides were fringed with clustering shells and sea-weeds, and the water gurgled in and out of his wide jaws, as he rolled along, dripping and glistening in the beams of the morning sun.

At last he saw Andromeda, and shot forward to take his prey, while the waves foamed white behind him, and before him fish fled leaping.

Then down from the height of the air fell Perseus, like a shooting star; down to the crest of the waves, while Andromeda hid her face as he shouted; and then there was silence for a while.

At last she looked up trembling, and saw Perseus springing toward her; and instead of the monster a long black rock, with the sea rippling quietly round it.

Who then so proud as Perseus, as he leapt back to the rock, and lifted his fair Andromeda in his arms, and flew with her to the cliff-top, as a falcon carries a dove?

Who so proud as Perseus, and who so joyful as all the Æthiop people? For they had stood watching the monster from the cliffs, wailing for the maiden's fate. And already a messenger had gone to Cepheus and Cassiopea, where they sat in sackcloth and ashes on the ground, in the innermost palace chambers, awaiting their daughter's end. And they came, and all the city with them, to see the wonder, with songs and with dances, with cymbals and harps, and received their daughter back again, as one alive from the dead.

Then Cepheus said, — "Hero of the Hellens, stay here with me and be my son-in-law, and I will give you the half of my kingdom."

Then Andromeda looked up at him, and new hope was kindled in her breast, so proud and fair did he stand, with one hand round her, and in the other the glittering sword. But she only sighed, and wept the more, and cried,—

“Why will you die, young as you are? Is there not death and sorrow enough in the world already? It is noble for me to die, that I may save the lives of a whole people; but you, better than them all, why should I slay you too? Go you your way; I must go mine.”

But Perseus cried, — “Not so; for the Lords of Olympus, whom I serve, are the friends of the heroes, and help them on to noble deeds. Led by them, I slew the Gorgon, the beautiful horror; and not without them do I come hither, to slay this monster with that same Gorgon’s head. Yet hide your eyes when I leave you, lest the sight of it freeze you too to stone.”

But the maiden answered nothing, for she could not believe his words. And then, suddenly looking up, she pointed to the sea, and shrieked, —

“There he comes, with the sunrise, as they promised. I must die now. How shall I endure it? Oh, go! Is it not dreadful enough to be torn piecemeal without having you to look on?” And she tried to thrust him away.

But he said, — “I go; yet promise me one thing ere I go; that if I slay this beast, you will be my wife, and come back with me to my kingdom in fruitful Argos, for I am a king’s heir. Promise me, and seal it with a kiss.”

Then she lifted up her face, and kissed him; and Perseus laughed for joy, and flew upward, while Andromeda crouched trembling on the rock, waiting for what might befall.

On came the great sea-monster, coasting along like a huge black galley, lazily breasting the ripple, and stopping at times by creek or headland, to watch for the laughter of girls at their bleaching, or cattle pawing on the sand-hills, or boys bathing on the beach. His great sides were fringed with clustering shells and sea-weeds, and the water gurgled in and out of his wide jaws, as he rolled along, dripping and glistening in the beams of the morning sun.

At last he saw Andromeda, and shot forward to take his prey, while the waves foamed white behind him, and before him fish fled leaping.

Then down from the height of the air fell Perseus, like a shooting star; down to the crest of the waves, while Andromeda hid her face as he shouted; and then there was silence for a while.

At last she looked up trembling, and saw Perseus springing toward her; and instead of the monster a long black rock, with the sea rippling quietly round it.

Who then so proud as Perseus, as he leapt back to the rock, and lifted his fair Andromeda in his arms, and flew with her to the cliff-top, as a falcon carries a dove?

Who so proud as Perseus, and who so joyful as all the Æthiop people? For they had stood watching the monster from the cliffs, wailing for the maiden's fate. And already a messenger had gone to Cepheus and Cassiopea, where they sat in sackcloth and ashes on the ground, in the innermost palace chambers, awaiting their daughter's end. And they came, and all the city with them, to see the wonder, with songs and with dances, with cymbals and harps, and received their daughter back again, as one alive from the dead.

Then Cepheus said, — "Hero of the Hellens, stay here with me and be my son-in-law, and I will give you the half of my kingdom."

"I will be your son-in-law," said Perseus, "but of your kingdom I will have none; for I long after the pleasant land of Greece, and my mother who waits for me at home."

Then Cepheus said, — "You must not take my daughter away at once, for she is to us like one alive from the dead. Stay with us here a year, and after that you shall return with honor." And Perseus consented; but before he went to the palace, he bade the people bring stones and wood, and built three altars, one to Athene, and one to Hermes, and one to Father Zeus, and offered bullocks and rams.

And some said, — "This is a pious man;" yet the priest said, — "The Sea Queen will be yet more fierce against us, because her monster is slain." But they were afraid to speak aloud, for they feared the Gorgon's head. So they went up to the palace: and when they came in, there stood in the hall Phineus, the brother of Cepheus, chafing like a bear robbed of her whelps, and with him his sons, and his servants, and many an armed man; and he cried to Cepheus, —

"You shall not marry your daughter to this stranger, of whom no one knows even the name. Was not Andromeda betrothed to my son? And now she is safe again, has he not a right to claim her?"

But Perseus laughed, and answered, — "If your son is in want of a bride, let him save a maiden for himself. As yet he seems but a helpless bridegroom. He left this one to die, and dead she is to him. I saved her alive, and alive she is to me, but to no one else. Ungrateful man! have I not saved your land, and the lives of your sons and daughters, and will you requite me thus? Go, or it will be worse for you." But all the men-at-arms drew their swords, and rushed on him like wild beasts.

Then he unveiled the Gorgon's head, and said, — "This has delivered my bride from one wild beast ; it shall deliver her from many." And as he spoke, Phineus and all his men-at-arms stopped short, and stiffened each man as he stood ; and before Perseus had drawn the goat-skin over the face again, they were all turned into stone.

Then Perseus bade the people bring levers and roll them out ; and what was done with them after that, I cannot tell.

So they made a great wedding-feast, which lasted seven whole days, and who so happy as Perseus and Andromeda?

But on the eighth night, Perseus dreamed a dream ; and he saw standing beside him Pallas Athene, as he had seen her in Seriphus, seven long years before ; and she stood and called him by name, and said,—

"Perseus, you have played the man, and see, you have your reward. Know now that the gods are just, and help him who helps himself. Now give me here Harpe the sword, and the sandals, and the hat of darkness, that I may give them back to their owners ; but the Gorgon's head you shall keep awhile, for you will need it in your land of Greece. Then you shall lay it up in my temple at Seriphus, that I may wear it on my shield forever, a terror to the Titans and the monsters, and the foes of gods and men. And as for this land, I have appeased the sea and the fire, and there shall be no more floods nor earthquakes. But let the people build altars to Father Zeus and to me, and worship the Immortals, the Lords of heaven and earth."

And Perseus rose to give her the sword, and the cap, and the sandals : but he woke, and his dream vanished away. And yet it was not altogether a dream ; for the goat-skin with the head was in its place : but the sword, him, and he ate of it ; and then he knew that the oracle was fulfilled at last. So he wandered no more : but settled, and built a town, and became a king again.

But the ram carried the two children far away over land and sea, till he came to the Thracian Chersonese, and there Helle fell into the sea. So those narrow straits are called " Hellespont,¹" after her ; and they bear that name until this day.

Then the ram flew on with Phrixus to the northeast, across the sea which we call the Black Sea now ; but the Hellens called it Euxine. And at last, they say, he stopped at Colchis, on the steep Circassian coast ; and there Phrixus married Chalciopé, the daughter of Æetes the king ; and offered the ram in sacrifice ; and Æetes nailed the ram's fleece to a beech, in the grove of Ares the war-god.

And after a while Phrixus died and was buried, but his spirit had no rest ; for he was buried far from his native land, and the pleasant hills of Hellas. So he came in dreams to the heroes of the Minyæ, and called sadly by their beds, — " Come and set my spirit free, that I may go home to my fathers and to my kinsfolk, and the pleasant Minyan land."

And they asked, — " How shall we set your spirit free?"

" You must sail over the sea to Colchis, and bring home the golden fleece ; and then my spirit will come back with it, and I shall sleep with my fathers and have rest."

He came thus, and called to them often : but when they woke they looked at each other, and said, — " Who dare sail to Colchis, or bring home the golden fleece?" And in all the country none was brave enough to try it ; for the man and the time were not come.

¹ The word signifies Helle's sea.

Phrixus had a cousin called Æson, who was king in Iolcus by the sea. There he ruled over the rich Minyan heroes, as Athamas his uncle ruled in Bœotia; and like Athamas, he was an unhappy man. For he had a step-brother named Pelias, of whom some said that he was a nymph's son, and there were dark and sad tales about his birth. When he was a babe he was cast out on the mountains, and a wild mare came by and kicked him. But a shepherd passing found the baby, with its face all blackened by the blow; and took him home, and called him Pelias,¹ because his face was bruised and black. And he grew up fierce and lawless, and did many a fearful deed; and at last he drove out Æson his step-brother, and then his own brother Neleus, and took the kingdom to himself, and ruled over the rich Minyan heroes, in Iolcus by the sea.

And Æson, when he was driven out, went sadly away out of the town, leading his little son by the hand; and he said to himself, "I must hide the child in the mountains, or Pelias will surely kill him, because he is the heir."

So he went up from the sea across the valley, through the vineyards and the olive groves, and across the torrent of Anaurus, toward Pelion the ancient mountain, whose brows are white with snow.

He went up and up into the mountain, over marsh and crag, and down, till the boy was tired and foot-sore, and Æson had to bear him in his arms, till he came to the mouth of a lonely cave, at the foot of a mighty cliff.

Above the cliff the snow wreaths hung, dripping and cracking in the sun: but at its foot, around the cave's mouth, grew all fair flowers and herbs, as if in a garden, ranged in order, each sort by itself. There they grew gayly in the sunshine, and the spray of the torrent from above ; while from the cave came a sound of music, and a man's voice singing to the harp.

¹ The name signifies the Discolored.

Then Æson put down the lad, and whispered, —

“ Fear not, but go in, and whomsoever you shall find, lay your hands upon his knees, and say, ‘ In the name of Zeus, the Father of gods and men, I am your guest from this day forth.’ ”

Then the lad went in without trembling, for he too was a hero's son : but when he was within, he stopped in wonder, to listen to that magic song.

And there he saw the singer lying upon bear-skins and fragrant boughs ; Cheiron, the ancient Centaur, the wisest of all things beneath the sky. Down to the waist he was a man ; but below he was a noble horse ; his white hair rolled down over his broad shoulders, and his white beard over his broad brown chest ; and his eyes were wise and mild, and his forehead like a mountain-wall.

And in his hands he held a harp of gold, and struck it with a golden key ; and as he struck he sang till his eyes glittered, and filled all the cave with light.

And he sang of the birth of Time, and of the heavens and the dancing stars ; and of the ocean, and the ether,¹ and the fire, and the shaping of the wondrous earth. And he sang of the treasures of the hills, and the hidden jewels of the mine, and the veins of fire and metal, and the virtues of all healing herbs, and of the speech of birds, and of prophecy, and of hidden things to come.

Then he sang of health, and strength, and manhood, and a valiant heart ; and of music, and hunting, and wrestling, and all the games which heroes love ; and of travel, and wars, and sieges, and a noble death in fight; and then he sang of peace and plenty, and of equal justice in the land: and as he sang, the boy listened wide-eyed, and forgot his errand in the song.

¹ The upper, purer air.

And at last old Cheiron was silent, and called the lad with a soft voice.

And the lad ran trembling to him, and would have laid his hands upon his knees: but Cheiron smiled, and said, "Call hither your father Æson, for I know you, and all that has befallen, and saw you both afar in the valley, even before you left the town."

Then Æson came in sadly, and Cheiron asked him, "Why came you not yourself to me, Æson, the Æolid¹?"

And Æson said, —

"I thought, Cheiron will pity the lad if he sees him come alone; and I wished to try whether he was fearless, and dare venture like a hero's son. But now I entreat you by Father Zeus, let the boy be your guest till better times, and train him among the sons of the heroes, that he may avenge his father's house."

Then Cheiron smiled, and drew the lad to him, and laid his hand upon his golden locks, and said, "Are you afraid of my horse's hoofs, fair boy, or will you be my pupil from this day?"

"I would gladly have horse's hoofs like you, if I could sing such songs as yours."

And Cheiron laughed, and said, "Sit here by me till sundown, when your playfellows will come home, and you shall learn like them to be a king, worthy to rule over gallant men."

Then he turned to Æson, and said, "Go back in peace, and bend before the storm like a prudent man. This boy shall not cross the Anaurus again, till he has become a glory to you and to the house of Æolus."

¹ The word signifies descendant of Æolus; Æson was grandson to Æolus, a ruler of Thessaly.

And Æson wept over his son and went away; but the boy did not weep, so full was his fancy of that strange cave, and the Centaur, and his song, and the playfellows whom he was to see.

Then Cheiron put the lyre into his hands, and taught him how to play it, till the sun sank low behind the cliff, and a shout was heard outside.

And then in came the sons of the heroes, Æneas,¹ and Heracles, and Peleus,² and many another mighty name.

And great Cheiron leapt up joyfully, and his hoofs made the cave resound, as they shouted, "Come out, Father Cheiron; come out and see our game." And one cried, "I have killed two deer," and another, "I took a wild cat among the crags;" and Heracles dragged a wild goat after him by its horns, for he was as huge as a mountain crag; and Cæneus³ carried a bear-cub under each arm, and laughed when they scratched and bit; for neither tooth nor steel could wound him.

And Cheiron praised them all, each according to his deserts.

Only one walked apart and silent, Asclepius, the too-wise child, with his bosom full of herbs and flowers, and round his wrist a spotted snake; he came with downcast eyes to Cheiron, and whispered how he had watched the snake cast his old skin, and grow young again before his eyes, and how he had gone down into a village in the vale, and cured a dying man with an herb which he had seen a sick goat eat.

¹ One of the heroes of the Trojan war. He afterwards wandered to Italy, and, according to tradition, became the founder of the Roman nation.

² Father of the hero Achilles.

³ Cæneus was originally a maiden beloved by Poseidon. She had been transformed by the latter into a youth, and made invulnerable.

And Cheiron smiled, and said, "To each Athene and Apollo give some gift, and each is worthy in his place; but to this child they have given an honor beyond all honors, to cure while others kill."

Then the lads brought in wood, and split it, and lighted a blazing fire; and others skinned the deer and quartered them, and set them to roast before the fire; and while the venison was cooking they bathed in the snow torrent, and washed away the dust and sweat.

And then all ate till they could eat no more (for they had tasted nothing since the dawn), and drank of the clear spring water, for wine is not fit for growing lads. And when the remnants were put away, they all lay down upon the skins and leaves about the fire, and each took the lyre in turn, and sang and played with all his heart.

And after a while they all went out to a plot of grass at the cave's mouth, and there they boxed, and ran, and wrestled, and laughed till the stones fell from the cliffs.

Then Cheiron took his lyre, and all the lads joined hands; and as he played, they danced to his measure, in and out, and round and round. There they danced hand in hand, till the night fell over land and sea, while the black glen shone with their broad white limbs, and the gleam of their golden hair.

And the lad danced with them, delighted, and then slept a wholesome sleep, upon fragrant leaves of bay, and myrtle, and marjoram, and flowers of thyme; and rose at the dawn, and bathed in the torrent, and became a schoolfellow to the heroes' sons, and forgot Iolcus, and his father, and all his former life. But he grew strong, and brave, and cunning, upon the pleasant downs of Pelion, in the keen, hungry, mountain air. And he learnt to wrestle, and to box, and to hunt, and to play upon the harp; and next he learnt to ride, for old Cheiron used to mount him on his back; and he learnt the virtues of all herbs, and how to cure all wounds; and Cheiron called him Jason the healer, and that is his name until this day.

PART II.

HOW JASON LOST HIS SANDAL IN ANAURUS.

AND ten years came and went, and Jason was grown to be a mighty man. Some of his fellows were gone, and some were growing up by his side. Asclepius was gone into Peloponnese, to work his wondrous cures on men; and some say he used to raise the dead to life. And Heracles was gone to Thebes, to fulfil those famous labors which have become a proverb among men. And Peleus had married a sea-nymph, and his wedding is famous to this day. And Æneas was gone home to Troy, and many a noble tale you will read of him, and of all the other gallant heroes, the scholars of Cheiron the just. And it happened on a day that Jason stood on the mountain, and looked north and south, and east and west; and Cheiron stood by him and watched him, for he knew that the time was come.

And Jason looked and saw the plains of Thessaly, where the Lapithæ breed their horses; and the lake of Boebe, and the stream which runs northward to Peneus and Tempe; and he looked north, and saw the mountain wall which guards the Magnesian shore; Olympus, the seat of the Immortals, and Ossa, and Pelion, where he stood. Then he looked east, and saw the bright blue sea, which stretched away forever toward the dawn. Then he looked south, and saw a pleasant land, with white-walled towns and farms, nestling along the shore of a land-locked bay, while the smoke rose blue among the trees; and he knew it for the bay of Pagasæ, and the rich lowlands of Hæmonia,¹ and Iolcus by the sea.

Then he sighed, and asked : "Is it true what the heroes tell me, that I am heir of that fair land?"

"And what good would it be to you, Jason, if you were heir of that fair land?"

"I would take it and keep it."

"A strong man has taken it and kept it long. Are you stronger than Pelias the terrible?"

"I can try my strength with his," said Jason. But Cheiron sighed, and said, —

"You have many a danger to go through before you rule in Iolcus by the sea ; many a danger, and many a woe ; and strange troubles in strange lands, such as man never saw before."

"The happier I," said Jason, "to see what man never saw before."

And Cheiron sighed again, and said : "The eaglet must leave the nest when it is fledged. Will you go to Iolcus by the sea? Then promise me two things before you go."

Jason promised, and Cheiron answered : "Speak harshly to no soul whom you may meet, and stand by the word which you shall speak."

Jason wondered why Cheiron asked this of him ; but he knew that the Centaur was a prophet, and saw things long before they came. So he promised, and leapt down the mountain, to take his fortune like a man.

He went down through the arbutus thickets, and across the downs of thyme, till he came to the vineyard walls, and the pomegranates and the olives in the glen ; and among the olives roared Anaurus, all foaming with a summer flood.

¹ Poetical name of Thessaly.

And on the bank of Anaurus sat a woman, all wrinkled, gray, and old ; her head shook palsied on her breast, and her hands shook palsied on her knees ; and when she saw Jason, she spoke, whining : "Who will carry me across the flood ?"

Jason was bold and hasty, and was just going to leap into the flood ; and yet he thought twice before he leapt, so loud roared the torrent down, all brown from the mountain rains, and silver-veined with melting snow ; while underneath he could hear the boulders rumbling like the tramp of horsemen or the roll of wheels, as they ground along the narrow channel, and shook the rocks on which he stood.

But the old woman whined all the more : "I am weak and old, fair youth. For Hera's sake, carry me over the torrent."

And Jason was going to answer her scornfully, when Cheiron's words came to his mind.

So he said : "For Hera's sake, the Queen of the Immortals on Olympus, I will carry you over the torrent, unless we both are drowned midway."

Then the old dame leapt upon his back, as nimbly as a goat ; and Jason staggered in, wondering ; and the first step was up to his knees.

The first step was up to his knees, and the second step was up to his waist : and the stones rolled about his feet, and his feet slipped about the stones ; so he went on staggering and panting, while the old woman cried from off his back, —

"Fool, you have wet my mantle ! Do you make game of poor old souls like me ?"

Jason had half a mind to drop her, and let her get through the torrent by herself ; but Cheiron's words were in his mind, and he said only, "Patience, mother; the best horse may stumble some day."

At last he staggered to the shore and set her down upon the bank; and a strong man he needed to have been, or that wild water he never would have crossed.

He lay panting awhile upon the bank, and then leapt up to go upon his journey; but he cast one look at the old woman, for he thought, "She should thank me once at least."

And as he looked she grew fairer than all women, and taller than all men on earth; and her garments shone like the summer sea, and her jewels like the stars of heaven; and over her forehead was a veil, woven of the golden clouds of sunset; and through the veil she looked down on him with great soft heifer's eyes; with great eyes, mild and awful, which filled all the glen with light.

And Jason fell upon his knees, and hid his face between his hands.

And she spoke, "I am the Queen of Olympus, Hera the wife of Zeus. As thou hast done to me, so will I do to thee. Call on me in the hour of need, and try if the Immortals can forget."

And when Jason looked up, she rose from off the earth like a pillar of tall white cloud, and floated away across the mountain peaks, toward Olympus the holy hill.

Then a great fear fell on Jason; but after a while he grew light of heart; and he blessed old Cheiron, and said, "Surely the Centaur is a prophet, and guessed what would come to pass, when he bade me speak harshly to no soul whom I might meet."

Then he went down toward Iolcus, and as he walked he found that he had lost one of his sandals in the flood.

And as he went through the streets the people came out to look at him, so tall and fair was he; but some of the elders whispered together; and at last one of them stopped Jason, and called to him, "Fair lad, who are you, and whence come you, and what is your errand in the town?"

GREEK HEROES. — PAGE 60.

"My name, good father, is Jason, and I come from Pelion up above: and my errand is to Pelias your king; tell me then where his palace is."

But the old man started, and grew pale, and said, "Do you not know the oracle, my son, that you go so boldly through the town with but one sandal on?"

"I am a stranger here, and know of no oracle; but what of my one sandal? I lost the other in Anaurus while I was struggling with the flood."

Then the old man looked back to his companions; and one sighed and another smiled; at last he said, "I will tell you, lest you rush upon your ruin unawares. The oracle in Delphi has said that a man wearing one sandal should take the kingdom from Pelias, and keep it for himself. Therefore beware how you go up to his palace, for he is the fiercest and most cunning of all kings."

Then Jason laughed a great laugh, like a war-horse in his pride, — "Good news, good father, both for you and me. For that very end I came into the town."

Then he strode on toward the palace of Pelias, while all the people wondered at his bearing.

And he stood in the doorway, and cried, "Come out, come out, Pelias the valiant, and fight for your kingdom like a man."

Pelias came out, wondering, and "Who are you, bold youth?" he cried.

"I am Jason, the son of Æson, the heir of all this land."

Then Pelias lifted up his hands and eyes, and wept, or seemed to weep, and blessed the heavens which had brought his nephew to him, never to leave him more." "For," said he, "I have but three daughters, and no son to be my heir. You shall be my heir then, and rule the kingdom after me, and marry whichever of my daughters you shall choose; though a sad kingdom you will find it, and whosoever rules it a miserable man. But come in, come in and feast."

So he drew Jason in, whether he would or not, and spoke to him so lovingly and feasted him so well that Jason's anger passed; and after supper his three cousins came into the hall, and Jason thought that he should like well enough to have one of them for his wife. •

But at last he said to Pelias, "Why do you look so sad, my uncle? And what did you mean just now, when you said that this was a doleful kingdom and its ruler a miserable man?"

Then Pelias sighed heavily again and again and again, like a man who had to tell some dreadful story, and was afraid to begin; but at last —

"For seven long years and more have I never known a quiet night; and no more will he who comes after me till the golden fleece be brought home."

Then he told Jason the story of Phrixus, and of the golden fleece; and told him too, which was a lie, that Phrixus's spirit tormented him, calling to him day and night. And his daughters came and told the same tale (for their father had taught them their parts), and wept, and said, "Oh, who will bring home the golden fleece, that our uncle's spirit may have rest; and that we may have rest also, whom he never lets sleep in peace?"

Jason sat awhile sad and silent, for he had often heard of that golden fleece, but he looked on it as a thing hopeless and impossible for any mortal man to win it.

But when Pelias saw him silent he began to talk of other things, and courted Jason more and more, speaking to him as if he was certain to be his heir, and asking his advice about the kingdom ; till Jason, who was young and simple, could not help saying to himself, " Surely he is not the dark man whom people call him. Yet why did he drive my father out ? " And he asked Pelias boldly, " Men say that you are terrible, and a man of blood ; but I find you a kind and hospitable man ; and as you are to me, so will I be to you. Yet why did you drive my father out ? "

Pelias smiled and sighed : " Men have slandered me in that as in all things. Your father was growing old and weary, and he gave the kingdom up to me of his own will. You shall see him to-morrow and ask him, and he will tell you the same. "

Jason's heart leapt in him when he heard that he was to see his father ; and he believed all that Pelias said, forgetting that his father might not dare to tell the truth.

" One thing more there is, " said Pelias, " on which I need your advice ; for though you are young, I see in you a wisdom beyond your years. There is one neighbor of mine whom I dread more than all men on earth. I am stronger than he now, and can command him : but I know that if he stay among us, he will work my ruin in the end. Can you give me a plan, Jason, by which I can rid myself of that man ? "

After a while Jason answered, half laughing, " Were I you, I would send him to fetch that same golden fleece ; for if he once set forth after it, you would never be troubled with him more. "

And at that a bitter smile came across Pelias's lips, and a flash of wicked joy into his eyes ; and Jason saw it, and started ; and over his mind came the warning of the old man, and his own one sandal, and the oracle, and he saw that he was taken in a trap.

But Pelias only answered gently, "My son, he shall be sent forthwith."

"You mean me," cried Jason, starting up, "because I came here with one sandal!" And he lifted his fist angrily, while Pelias stood up to him like a wolf at bay ; and whether of the two was the stronger and the fiercer it would be hard to tell.

But after a moment Pelias spoke gently, "Why then so rash, my son? You, and not I, have said what is said ; why blame me for what I have not done? Had you bid me love the man of whom I spoke, and make him my son-in-law and heir, I would have obeyed you ; and what if I obey you now, and send the man to win himself immortal fame? I have not harmed you or him. One thing at least I know, that he will go, and that gladly ; for he has a hero's heart within him, loving glory, and scorning to break the word which he has given."

Jason saw that he was entrapped : but his second promise to Cheiron came into his mind, and he thought, "What if the Centaur were a prophet in that also, and meant that I should win the fleece!" Then he cried aloud, —

"You have well spoken, cunning uncle of mine! I love glory, and I dare keep to my word. I will go and fetch this golden fleece. Promise me but this in return, and keep your word as I keep mine. Treat my father lovingly while I am gone, for the sake of the all-seeing Zeus ; and give me up the kingdom for my own, on the day that I bring back the golden fleece."

Then Pelias looked at him, and almost loved him, in the midst of all his hate, and said, "I promise, and I will perform. It will be no shame to give up my kingdom to the man who wins that fleece."

Then they swore a great oath between them; and afterwards both went in, and lay down to sleep.

But Jason could not sleep for thinking of his mighty oath, and how he was to fulfil it, all alone, and without wealth or friends. So he tossed a long time upon his bed, and thought of this plan and of that; and sometimes Phrixus seemed to call him, in a thin voice, faint and low, as if it came from far across the sea, — "Let me come home to my fathers and have rest." And sometimes he seemed to see the eyes of Hera, and to hear her words again, — "Call on me in the hour of need, and see if the Immortals can forget."

And on the morrow he went to Pelias, and said, "Give me a victim, that I may sacrifice to Hera." So he went up, and offered his sacrifice; and as he stood by the altar, Hera sent a thought into his mind; and he went back to Pelias, and said, —

"If you are indeed in earnest, give me two heralds that they may go round to all the princes of the Minyæ, who were pupils of the Centaur with me, that we may fit out a ship together, and take what shall befall."

At that Pelias praised his wisdom, and hastened to send the heralds out; for he said in his heart, "Let all the princes go with him, and like him, never return; for so I shall be lord of all the Minyæ, and the greatest king in Hellas."

PART III.

HOW THEY BUILT THE SHIP ARGO IN IOLCUS.

So the heralds went out, and cried to all the heroes of the Minyæ, "Who dare come to the adventure of the golden fleece?"

And Hera stirred the hearts of all the princes, and they came from all their valleys to the yellow sands of Pagasæ. And first came Heracles the mighty, with his lion's skin and club, and behind him Hylas, his young squire, who bore his arrows and his bow; and Tiphys, the skilful steersman; and Butes, the fairest of all men; and Castor and Polydeuces¹ the twins, the sons of the magic swan; and Cæneus, the strongest of mortals, whom the Centaurs tried in vain to kill, and overwhelmed him with trunks of pine-trees, but even so he would not die; and thither came Zetes and Calais, the winged sons of the North-wind; and Peleus, the father of Achilles, whose bride was silver-footed Thetis the goddess of the sea. And thither came Telamon² and Oileus,³ the fathers of the two Æantes,⁴ who fought upon the plains of Troy⁵; and Mopsus, the wise soothsayer, who knew the speech of

¹ The Latin form of this name is Pollux.

² King of Salamis, and father of Æas (Lat. Ajax) the Great.

³ King of the Locri, and father of Æas (Lat. Ajax) the Less.

⁴ The plural form of Æas (Lat. Ajax).

⁵ The allusion is to the famous Trojan war, waged by the Greeks against the Trojans for the recovery of Helen. Helen, the loveliest of the Grecian women, had been carried away from her home in Sparta by Paris, a Trojan prince.

birds ; and Idmon, to whom Phœbus gave a tongue to prophesy of things to come ; and Ancæus, who could read the stars, and knew all the circles of the heavens ; and Argus, the famed shipbuilder, and many a hero more, in helmets of brass and gold with tall dyed horse-hair crests, and embroidered shirts of linen beneath their coats of mail, and greaves of polished tin to guard their knees in fight ; with each man his shield upon his shoulder, of many a fold of tough bull's hide, and his sword of tempered bronze in his silver-studded belt, and in his right hand a pair of lances of the heavy white ash-staves.

So they came down to Iolcus, and all the city came out to meet them, and were never tired with looking at their height, and their beauty, and their gallant bearing, and the glitter of their inlaid arms. And some said, "Never was such a gathering of the heroes since the Hellens conquered the land." But the women sighed over them, and whispered, "Alas ! they are all going to their death."

Then they felled the pines on Pelion, and shaped them with the axe, and Argus taught them to build a galley, the first long ship which ever sailed the seas. They pierced her for fifty oars, an oar for each hero of the crew, and pitched her with coal-black pitch, and painted her bows with vermilion ; and they named her Argo after Argus, and worked at her all day long. And at night Pelias feasted them like a king, and they slept in his palace-porch.

But Jason went away to the northward, and into the land of Thrace, till he found Orpheus, the prince of minstrels, where he dwelt in his cave under Rhodope, among the savage Cicon tribes. And he asked him, "Will you leave your mountains, Orpheus, my fellow-scholar in old times, and cross Strymon once more with me, to sail with the heroes of the Minyæ, and bring home the golden fleece, and charm for us all men and all monsters with your magic harp and song?"

Then Orpheus sighed, "Have I not had enough of toil and of weary wandering far and wide, since I lived in Cheiron's cave, above Iolcus by the sea? In vain is the skill and the voice which my goddess mother gave me; in vain have I sung and labored; in vain I went down to the dead, and charmed all the kings of Hades, to win back Eurydice¹ my bride. For I won her, my beloved, and lost her again the same day, and wandered away in my madness, even to Egypt and the Libyan sands, and the isles of all the seas, driven on by the terrible gadfly, while I charmed in vain the hearts of men, and the savage forest beasts, and the trees, and the lifeless stones, with my magic harp and song, giving rest, but finding none. But at last Calliope,² my mother, delivered me, and brought me home in peace; and I dwell here in the cave alone, among the savage Cicon tribes, softening their wild hearts with music and the gentle laws of Zeus. And now I must go out again, to the ends of all the earth, far away into the misty darkness, to the last wave of the Eastern Sea. But what is doomed must be, and a friend's demand obeyed; for prayers are the daughters of Zeus, and who honors them honors him."

Then Orpheus rose up sighing, and took his harp, and went over Strymon. And he led Jason to the southwest, up the banks of Haliacmon and over the spurs of Pindus, to Dodona,¹ the town of Zeus, where it stood by the side of the sacred lake, and the fountain which breathed out fire, in the darkness of the ancient oak wood, beneath the mountain of the hundred springs. And he led him to the holy oak, where the black dove settled in old times, and was changed into the priestess of Zeus, and gave oracles to all nations round. And he bade him cut down a bough and sacrifice to Hera and to Zeus; and they took the bough and came to Iolcus, and nailed it to the beak-head of the ship.

¹ On the death of Eurydice, Orpheus followed her into the lower world. There he so charmed Pluto by the music of his lyre as to win a promise that his wife should be restored to him, but only on condition that he should not look back upon her until they reached the upper world. The anxiety of affection, however, overcame him just as he was on the point of emerging from the shades, and he looked back only to see her vanish in the darkness.

² One of the nine muses.

And at last the ship was finished, and they tried to launch her down the beach; but she was too heavy for them to move her, and her keel sank deep in the sand. Then all the heroes looked at each other blushing; but Jason spoke, and said, "Let us ask the magic bough; perhaps it can help us in our need."

Then a voice came from the bough, and Jason heard the words it said, and bade Orpheus play upon the harp, while the heroes waited round, holding the pine-trunk rollers, to help her toward the sea.

Then Orpheus took his harp, and began his magic song: "How sweet it is to ride upon the surges, and to leap from wave to wave, while the wind sings cheerful in the cordage, and the oars flash fast among the foam! How sweet it is to roam across the ocean, and see new towns and wondrous lands, and to come home laden with treasure, and to win undying fame!"

And the good ship Argo heard him, and longed to be away and out at sea; till she stirred in every timber, and heaved from stem to stern, and leapt up from the sand upon the rollers, and plunged onward like a gallant horse; and the heroes fed her path with pine-trunks, till she rushed into the whispering sea.

¹ The seat of the most ancient of the oracles in Greece. The will of Zeus was supposed to be revealed in the sounds produced by the wind as it rustled through the trees.

Then they stored her well with food and water, and pulled the ladder up on board, and settled themselves each man to his oar, and kept time to Orpheus's harp; and away across the bay they rowed southward, while the people lined the cliffs; and the women wept while the men shouted, at the starting of that gallant crew.

PART IV.

HOW THE ARGONAUTS SAILED TO COLCHIS.

AND what happened next, my children, whether it be true or not, stands written in ancient songs, which you shall read for yourselves some day. And grand old songs they are, written in grand old rolling verse ; and they call them the Songs of Orpheus, or the Orphics, to this day. And they tell how the heroes came to Aphetæ, across the bay, and waited for the southwest wind, and chose themselves a captain from their crew : and how all called for Heracles, because he was the strongest and most huge ; but Heracles refused, and called for Jason, because he was the wisest of them all. So Jason was chosen captain : and Orpheus heaped a pile of wood, and slew a bull, and offered it to Hera, and called all the heroes to stand round, each man's head crowned with olive, and to strike their swords into the bull. Then he filled a golden goblet with the bull's blood, and with wheaten flour, and honey, and wine, and the bitter salt sea-water, and bade the heroes taste. So each tasted the goblet, and passed it round, and vowed an awful vow : and they vowed before the sun, and the night, and the blue-haired sea who shakes the land, to stand by Jason faithfully, in the adventure of the golden fleece ; and whosoever shrank back, or disobeyed, or turned traitor to his vow, then justice should witness against him, and the Erinyes¹ who track guilty men.

¹ The Erinyes (also called the Furies) were three female divinities who personified the pangs of remorse or the stings of a guilty conscience.

Then Jason lighted the pile, and burnt the carcase of the bull ; and they went to their ship and sailed eastward, like men who have a work to do ; and the place from which they went was called Aphetæ, the sailing-place, from that day forth. Three thousand years and more they sailed away, into the unknown Eastern seas ; and great nations have come and gone since then, and many a storm has swept the earth ; and many a mighty armament, to which Argo would be but one small boat, English and French, Turkish and Russian, have sailed those waters since ; yet the fame of that small Argo lives forever, and her name is become a proverb among men.

So they sailed past the Isle of Sciathos, with the Cape of Sepias on their left, and turned to the northward toward Pelion, up the long Magnesian shore. On their right hand was the open sea, and on their left old Pelion rose, while the clouds crawled round his dark pine-forests, and his caps of summer snow. And their hearts yearned for the dear old mountain, as they thought of the pleasant days gone by, and of the sports of their boyhood, and their hunting, and their schooling in the cave beneath the cliff. And at last Peleus spoke — “Let us land here, friends, and climb the dear old hill once more. We are going on a fearful journey : who knows if we shall see Pelion again ? Let us go up to Cheiron our master, and ask his blessing ere we start. And I have a boy, too, with him, whom he trains as he trained me once, the son whom Thetis brought me, the silver-footed lady of the sea, whom I caught in the cave, and tamed her, though she changed her shape seven times. For she changed, as I held her, into water, and to vapour, and to burning flame, and to a rock, and to a black-maned lion, and to a tall and stately tree. But I held her and held her ever, till she took her own shape again, and led her to my father's house, and won her for my bride. And all the rulers of Olympus came to our wedding, and the heavens and the earth rejoiced together, when an Immortal wedded mortal man. And now let me see my son ; for it is not often I shall see him upon earth : famous he will be, but short-lived, and die in the flower of youth."

So Tiphys, the helmsman, steered them to the shore under the crags of Pelion ; and they went up through the dark pine-forests toward the Centaur's cave.

And they came into the misty hall, beneath the snow-crowned crag ; and saw the great Centaur lying with his huge limbs spread upon the rock ; and beside him stood Achilles, the child whom no steel could wound, and played upon his harp right sweetly, while Cheiron watched and smiled.

Then Cheiron leapt up and welcomed them, and kissed them every one, and set a feast before them, of swine's flesh, and venison, and good wine ; and young Achilles served them, and carried the golden goblet round. And after supper all the heroes clapped their hands, and called on Orpheus to sing ; but he refused, and said, "How can I, who am the younger, sing before our ancient host ?" So they called on Cheiron to sing, and Achilles brought him his harp ; and he began a wondrous song ; a famous story of old time, of the fight between Centaurs and the Lapithæ, which you may still see carved in stone.¹ He sang how his brothers came to ruin by their folly, when they were mad with wine ; and how they and the heroes fought, with fists, and teeth, and the goblets from which they drank ; and how they tore up the pine trees in their fury, and hurled great crags of stone, while the mountains thundered with the battle, and the land was wasted far and wide; till the Lapithæ drove them from their home in the rich Thessalian plains to the lonely glens of Pindus, leaving Cheiron all alone. And the heroes praised his song right heartily; for some of them had helped in that great fight.

¹ In the Elgin Marbles.

Then Orpheus took the lyre, and sang of Chaos, and the making of the wondrous World, and how all things sprang from Love, who could not live alone in the Abyss. And as he sang, his voice rose from the cave, above the crags, and through the tree-tops, and the glens of oak and pine. And the trees bowed their heads when they heard it, and the gray rocks cracked and rang, and the forest beasts crept near to listen, and the birds forsook their nests and hovered round. And old Cheiron clapt his hands together, and beat his hoofs upon the ground, for wonder at that magic song.

Then Peleus kissed his boy, and wept over him, and they went down to the ship; and Cheiron came down with them, weeping, and kissed them one by one, and blest them, and promised to them great renown. And the heroes wept when they left him, till their great hearts could weep no more; for he was kind and just and pious, and wiser than all beasts and men. Then he went up to a cliff, and prayed for them, that they might come home safe and well; while the heroes rowed away, and watched him standing on his cliff above the sea, with his great hands raised toward heaven, and his white locks waving in the wind; and they strained their eyes to watch him to the last, for they felt that they should look on him no more.

So they rowed on over the long swell of the sea, past Olympus, the seat of the Immortals, and past the wooded bays of Athos, and Samothrace, the sacred isle; and they came past Lemnos to the Hellespont, and through the narrow strait of Abydos, and so on into the Propontis, which we call Marmora now. And there they met with Cyzicus, ruling in Asia over the Dolions, who, the songs say, was the son of Æneas, of whom you will hear many a tale some day. For Homer tells us how he fought at Troy; and Virgil how he sailed away and founded Rome; and men believed until late years that from him sprang our old British kings. Now Cyzicus, the songs say, welcomed the heroes; for his father had been one of Cheiron's scholars; so he welcomed them, and feasted them, and stored their ship with corn and wine, and cloaks and rugs, the songs say, and shirts, of which no doubt they stood in need.

But at night, while they lay sleeping, came down on them terrible men, who lived with the bears in the mountains, like Titans or giants in shape; for each of them had six arms, and they fought with young firs and pines. But Heracles killed them all before morn with his deadly poisoned arrows; but among them, in the darkness, he slew Cyzicus the kindly prince.

Then they got to their ship and to their oars, and Tiphys bade them cast off the hawsers, and go to sea. But as he spoke a whirlwind came, and spun the Argo round, and twisted the hawsers together, so that no man could loose them. Then Tiphys dropped the rudder from his hand, and cried, "This comes from the gods above." But Jason went forward, and asked counsel of the magic bough.

Then the magic bough spoke and answered, — "This is because you have slain Cyzicus your friend. You must appease his soul, or you will never leave this shore."

Jason went back sadly, and told the heroes what he had heard. And they leapt on shore, and searched till dawn ; and at dawn they found the body, all rolled in dust and blood, among the corpses of those monstrous beasts. And they wept over their kind host, and laid him on a fair bed, and heaped a huge mound over him, and offered black sheep at his tomb, and Orpheus sang a magic song to him, that his spirit might have rest. And then they held games at the tomb, after the custom of those times, and Jason gave prizes to each winner. To Ancæus he gave a golden cup, for he wrestled best of all ; and to Heracles a silver one, for he was the strongest of all ; and to Castor, who rode best, a golden crest ; and Polydeuces the boxer had a rich carpet, and to Orpheus, for his song, a sandal with golden wings. But Jason himself was the best of all the archers, and the Minyæ crowned him with an olive crown ; and so, the songs say, the soul of good Cyzicus was appeased, and the heroes went on their way in peace.

But when Cyzicus's wife heard that he was dead, she died likewise of grief ; and her tears became a fountain of clear water, which flows the whole year round.

Then they rowed away, the songs say, along the Mysian shore, and past the mouth of Rhyndacus, till they found a pleasant bay, sheltered by the long ridges of Arganthus, and by high walls of basalt rock. And there they ran the ship ashore upon the yellow sand, and furled the sail, and took the mast down, and lashed it in its crutch.¹ And next they let down the ladder, and went ashore to sport and rest.

And there Heracles went away into the woods, bow in hand, to hunt wild deer ; and Hylas the fair boy slipt away after him, and followed him by stealth, until he lost himself among the glens, and sat down weary to rest himself by the side of a lake; and there the water nymphs came up to look at him, and loved him, and carried him down under the lake to be their playfellow, forever happy and young. And Heracles sought for him in vain, shouting his name till all the mountains rang; but Hylas never heard him, far down under the sparkling lake. So while Heracles wandered searching for him, a fair breeze sprang up, and Heracles was nowhere to be found; and the Argo sailed away, and Heracles was left behind, and never saw the noble Phasian¹ stream.

¹ An upright support rising from the stern, having a head like that of a crutch, in which the mast rested when let down.

Then the Minyæ came to a doleful land, where Amycus the giant ruled, and cared nothing for the laws of Zeus, but challenged all strangers to box with him, and those whom he conquered he slew. But Polydeuces the boxer struck him a harder blow than he ever felt before, and slew him; and the Minyæ went on up the Bosphorus, till they came to the city of Phineus, the fierce Bithynian king; for Zetes and Calais bade Jason land there, because they had a work to do.

And they went up from the shore toward the city, through forests white with snow; and Phineus came out to meet them with a lean and woeful face, and said, "Welcome, gallant heroes, to the land of bitter blasts, a land of cold and misery; yet I will feast you as best I can." And he led them in, and set meat before them; but before they could put their hands to their mouths, down came two fearful monsters, the like of whom man never saw; for they had the faces and the hair of fair maidens, but the wings and claws of hawks; and they

¹ The Phasis was the river in Colchis which the Argonauts reached at the end of their voyage.

But the Argonauts went eastward, and out into the open sea, which we now call the Black Sea, but it was called the Euxine then. No Hellen had ever crossed it, and all feared that dreadful sea, and its rocks, and shoals, and fogs, and bitter freezing storms; and they told strange stories of it, some false and some half true, how it stretched northward to the ends of the earth, and the sluggish Putrid Sea, and the everlasting night, and the regions of the dead. So the heroes trembled, for all their courage, as they came into that wild Black Sea, and saw it stretching out before them, without a shore, as far as eye could see.

And first Orpheus spoke, and warned them,—"We shall come now to the wandering blue rocks; my mother warned me of them, Calliope, the immortal muse."

And soon they saw the blue rocks shining, like spires and castles of gray glass, while an ice-cold wind blew from them, and chilled all the heroes' hearts. And as they neared, they could see them heaving, as they rolled upon the long sea-waves, crashing and grinding together, till the roar went up to heaven. The sea sprang up in spouts between them, and swept round them in white sheets of foam; but their heads swung nodding high in air, while the wind whistled shrill among the crags.

The heroes' hearts sank within them, and they lay upon their oars in fear; but Orpheus called to Tiphys the helmsman,—"Between them we must pass; so look ahead for an opening, and be brave, for Hera is with us." But Tiphys the cunning helmsman stood silent, clenching his teeth, till he saw a heron come flying mast-high toward the rocks, and hover awhile before them, as if looking for a passage through. Then he cried,—"Hera has sent us a pilot; let us follow the cunning bird."

Then the heron flapped to and fro a moment, till he saw a hidden gap, and into it he rushed like an arrow, while the heroes watched what would befall.

And the blue rocks clashed together as the bird fled swiftly through; but they struck but a feather from his tail, and then rebounded apart at the shock.

Then Tiphys cheered the heroes, and they shouted; and the oars bent like withes beneath their strokes, as they rushed between those toppling ice-crags, and the cold blue lips of death. And ere the rocks could meet again, they had passed them, and were safe out in the open sea.

And after that they sailed on wearily along the Asian coast, by the Black¹ Cape and Thynias, where the hot stream of Thymbris² falls into the sea, and Sangarius, whose waters float on the Euxine, till they came to Wolf³ the river, and to Wolf the kindly king. And there died two brave heroes, Idmon and Tiphys the wise helmsman; one died of an evil sickness, and one a wild boar slew. So the heroes heaped a mound above them, and set upon it an oar on high, and left them there to sleep together, on the far-off Lycian⁴ shore. But Idas killed the boar, and avenged Tiphys; and Ancæus took the rudder and was helmsman, and steered them on toward the east.

And they went on past Sinope, and many a mighty river's mouth, and past many a barbarous tribe, and the cities of the Amazons, the warlike women of the East, till all night they heard the clank of anvils and the roar of furnace-blasts, and the forge-fires shone like sparks

¹ A translation of the Greek name Melana.

² A branch of the Sangarius.

³ A translation of the Greek name Lycus.

⁴ By "Lycian shore" is meant the shore of the river Lycus, which has just been called Wolf.

through the darkness, in the mountain glens aloft; for they were come to the shores of the Chalybes, the smiths who never tire, but serve Ares¹ the cruel War-god, forging weapons day and night.

And at day-dawn they looked eastward, and, midway between the sea and the sky, they saw white snow-peaks hanging, glittering sharp and bright above the clouds. And they knew that they were come to Caucasus, at the end of all the earth; Caucasus, the highest of all mountains, the father of the rivers of the East. On his peak lies chained the Titan,² while a vulture tears his heart; and at his feet are piled dark forests round the magic Colchian land.

And they rowed three days to the eastward, while Caucasus rose higher hour by hour, till they saw the dark stream of Phasis rushing headlong to the sea, and shining above the tree-tops, the golden roofs of king Æetes, the child of the sun.

Then out spoke Ancæus the helmsman, "We are come to our goal at last; for there are the roofs of Æetes, and the woods where all poisons grow; but who can tell us where among them is hid the golden fleece? Many a toil must we bear ere we find it, and bring it home to Greece."

But Jason cheered the heroes, for his heart was high and bold; and he said, "I will go alone up to Æetes, though he be the child of the sun, and win him with soft words. Better so than to go all together, and to come to blows at once." But the Minyæ would not stay behind, so they rowed boldly up the stream.

¹ See the "Descriptive Table of Greek Divinities," p. v.

² The Titan Prometheus, whose name signifies Forethought, had formed man out of clay, and instructed him in various arts. Later he had attempted to deceive Zeus in relation to the sacrifices due to the gods from men, and had also stolen fire from heaven for the benefit of men. He was punished by Zeus as described in the text, but was finally delivered by Heracles.

And a dream came to Æetes, and filled his heart with fear. He thought he saw a shining star, which fell into his daughter's lap; and that Medea, his daughter, took it gladly, and carried it to the river-side and cast it in, and there the whirling river bore it down, and out into the Euxine Sea.

Then he leapt up in fear, and bade his servants bring his chariot, that he might go down to the river-side and appease the nymphs, and the heroes whose spirits haunt the bank. So he went down in his golden chariot, and his daughters by his side, Medea the fair witch-maiden, and Chalciope, who had been Phrixus's wife, and behind him a crowd of servants and soldiers, for he was a rich and mighty prince.

And as he drove down by the reedy river, he saw Argo sliding up beneath the bank, and many a hero in her, like immortals for beauty and for strength, as their weapons glittered around them in the level morning sunlight, through the white mist of the stream. But Jason was the noblest of all; for Hera, who loved him, gave him beauty and tallness and terrible manhood.

And when they came near together, and looked into each other's eyes, the heroes were awed before Æetes as he shone in his chariot, like his father the glorious Sun; for his robes were of rich gold tissue, and the rays of his diadem flashed fire; and in his hand he bore a jewelled sceptre, which glittered like the stars; and sternly he looked at them under his brows, and sternly he spoke and loud:—

“Who are you, and what want you here, that you come to the shore of Cytæa?¹ Do you take no account of my rule, nor of my people the Colchians who serve me, who never tired yet in the battle, and know well how to face an invader?"

¹ A town on the Phasis, said to be the birthplace of Medea.

And the heroes sat silent awhile before the face of that ancient king. But Hera, the awful goddess, put courage into Jason's heart, and he rose and shouted loudly in answer, "We are no pirates nor lawless men. We come not to plunder and to ravage, or carry away slaves from your land; but my uncle, the son of Poseidon, Pelias the Minyan king, he it is who has set me on a quest to bring home the golden fleece. And these too, my bold comrades, they are no nameless men; for some are the sons of Immortals, and some of heroes far renowned. And we too never tire in battle, and know well how to give blows and to take; yet we wish to be guests at your table; it will be better so for both."

Then Æetes's rage rushed up like a whirlwind, and his eyes flashed fire as he heard; but he crushed his anger down in his breast, and spoke mildly a cunning speech, —

"If you will fight for the fleece with my Colchians, then many a man must die. But do you indeed expect to win from me the fleece in fight? So few you are, that if you be worsted, I can load your ship with your corpses. But if you will be ruled by me, you will find it better far to choose the best man among you, and let him fulfil the labors which I demand. Then I will give him the golden fleece for a prize and a glory to you all."

So saying, he turned his horses and drove back in silence to the town. And the Minyæ sat silent with sorrow, and longed for Heracles and his strength; for there was no facing the thousands of the Colchians, and the fearful chance of war.

But Chalciope, Phrixus's widow, went weeping to the town; for she remembered her Minyan husband, and all the pleasures of her youth, while she watched the fair faces of his kinsmen, and their long locks of golden hair. And she whispered to Medea, her sister, — "Why should all these brave men die? why does not my father give them up the fleece, that my husband's spirit may have rest?"

And Medea's heart pitied the heroes, and Jason most of all; and she answered, "Our father is stern and terrible, and who can win the golden fleece?" But Chalciope said, "These men are not like our men; there is nothing which they cannot dare nor do."

And Medea thought of Jason and his brave countenance, and said, "If there was one among them who knew no fear, I could show him how to win the fleece."

So in the dusk of evening they went down to the river-side, Chalciope and Medea the witch-maiden, and Argus, Phrixus's son. And Argus, the boy, crept forward among the beds of reeds, till he came where the heroes were sleeping, on the thwarts of the ship, beneath the bank, while Jason kept ward on shore, and leant upon his lance full of thought. And the boy came to Jason, and said, —

"I am the son of Phrixus, your cousin; and Chalciope, my mother, waits for you, to talk about the golden fleece."

Then Jason went boldly with the boy, and found the two princesses standing; and when Chalciope saw him she wept, and took his hands, and cried, —

"O cousin of my beloved, go home before you die!"

"It would be base to go home now, fair princess, and to have sailed all these seas in vain." Then both the princesses besought him, but Jason said, "It is too late."

"But you know not," said Medea, "what he must do who would win the fleece. He must tame the two brazen-footed bulls, who breathe devouring flame, and with them he must plough ere nightfall four acres in the field of Ares; and he must sow them with serpents' teeth, of which each tooth springs up into an armed man. Then he must fight with all those warriors; and little will it profit him to conquer them, for the fleece is guarded by a serpent more huge than any mountain pine, and over his body you must step if you would reach the golden fleece."

Then Jason laughed bitterly. "Unjustly is that fleece kept here, and by an unjust and lawless king; and unjustly shall I die in my youth, for I will attempt it ere another sun be set."

Then Medea trembled, and said, "No mortal man can reach that fleece unless I guide him through. For round it, beyond the river, is a wall full nine ells high, with lofty towers and buttresses, and mighty gates of threefold brass; and over the gates the wall is arched, with golden battlements above. And over the gateway sits Brimo, the wild witch-huntress of the wood, brandishing a pine-torch in her hands, while her mad hounds howl around. No man dare meet her or look on her, but only I her priestess, and she watches far and wide lest any stranger should come near."

"No wall so high but it may be climbed at last, and no wood so thick but it may be crawled through; no serpent so wary but he may be charmed, or witch-queen so fierce but spells may soothe her; and I may yet win the golden fleece if a wise maiden help bold men."

And he looked at Medea cunningly, and held her with his glittering eye, till she blushed and trembled, and said, —

"Who can face the fire of the bulls' breath, and fight ten thousand armed men?"

"He whom you help," said Jason, flattering her, "for your fame is spread over all the earth. Are you not the queen of all enchantresses, wiser even than your sister Circe in her fairy island in the West?"

GREEK HEROES. — PAGE 86.

"Would that I were with my sister Circe in her fairy island in the West, far away from sore temptation and thoughts which tear the heart! But if it must be so—for why should you die?—I have an ointment here; I made it from the magic ice-flower which sprang from Prometheus's wound, above the clouds on Caucasus, in the dreary fields of snow. Anoint yourself with that, and you shall have in you seven men's strength; and anoint your shield with it, and neither fire nor sword can harm you. But what you begin you must end before sunset, for its virtue lasts only one day. And anoint your helmet with it before you sow the serpents' teeth; and when the sons of earth spring up, cast your helmet among the ranks, and the deadly crop of the War-god's field will mow itself and perish."

Then Jason fell on his knees before her, and thanked her and kissed her hands; and she gave him the vase of ointment, and fled trembling through the reeds. And Jason told his comrades what had happened, and showed them the box of ointment; and all rejoiced but Idas, and he grew mad with envy.

And at sunrise Jason went and bathed, and anointed himself from head to foot, and his shield, and his helmet, and his weapons, and bade his comrades try the spell. So they tried to bend his lance, but it stood like an iron bar; and Idas in spite hewed at it with his sword, but the blade flew to splinters in his face. Then they hurled their lances at his shield, but the spear-points turned like lead; and Cæneus tried to throw him, but he never stirred a foot; and Polydeuces struck him with his fist a blow which would have killed an ox ; but Jason only smiled, and the heroes danced about him with delight ; and he leapt, and ran, and shouted in the joy of that enormous strength till the sun rose, and it was time to go and to claim Æetes's promise.

So he sent up Telamon and Æthalides to tell Æetes that he was ready for the fight ; and they went up among the marble walls, and beneath the roofs of gold, and stood in Æetes's hall, while he grew pale with rage.

"Fulfil your promise to us, child of the blazing sun. Give us the serpents' teeth, and let loose the fiery bulls ; for we have found a champion among us who can win the golden fleece."

And Æetes bit his lips, for he fancied that they had fled away by night ; but he could not go back from his promise, so he gave them the serpents' teeth.

Then he called for his chariot and his horses, and sent heralds through all the town ; and all the people went out with him to the dreadful War-god's field.

And there Æetes sat upon his throne, with his warriors on each hand, thousands and tens of thousands, clothed from head to foot in steel-chain mail. And the people and the women crowded to every window, and bank, and wall ; while the Minyæ stood together, a mere handful in the midst of that great host.

And Chalciope was there, and Argus, trembling, and Medea, wrapped closely in her vail ; but Æetes did not know that she was muttering cunning spells between her lips.

Then Jason cried, "Fulfil your promise, and let your fiery bulls come forth."

Then Æetes bade open the gates, and the magic bulls leapt out. Their brazen hoofs rang upon the ground, and their nostrils sent out sheets of flame as they rushed with lowered heads upon Jason ; but he never flinched a step. The flame of their breath swept round him, but it singed not a hair of his head ; and the bulls stopped short and trembled when Medea began her spell.

Then Jason sprang upon the nearest, and seized him by the horn ; and up and down they wrestled till the bull fell grovelling on his knees ; for the heart of the brute died within him, and his mighty limbs were loosed beneath the steadfast eye of that dark witch-maiden, and the magic whisper of her lips.

So both the bulls were tamed and yoked, and Jason bound them to the plough, and goaded them onward with his lance till he had ploughed the sacred field.

And all the Minyæ shouted ; but Æetes bit his lips with rage ; for the half of Jason's work was over, and the sun was yet high in heaven.

Then he took the serpents' teeth and sowed them, and waited what would befall. But Medea looked at him and at his helmet, lest he should forget the lesson she had taught.

And every furrow heaved and bubbled, and out of every clod rose a man. Out of the earth they rose by thousands, each clad from head to foot in steel, and drew their swords and rushed on Jason, where he stood in the midst alone.

Then the Minyæ grew pale with fear for him ; but Æetes laughed a bitter laugh. "See ! if I had not warriors enough already round me, I could call them out of the bosom of the earth."

But Jason snatched off his helmet, and hurled it into the thickest of the throng. And blind madness came upon them, suspicion, hate, and fear ; and one cried to his fellow, "Thou didst strike me!" and another, "Thou art Jason; thou shalt die!" So fury seized those earth-born phantoms, and each turned his hand against the rest; and they fought and were never weary till they all lay dead upon the ground. Then the magic furrows opened, and the kind earth took them home into her breast; and the grass grew up all green again above them, and Jason's work was done.

Then the Minyæ rose and shouted till Prometheus heard them from his crag. And Jason cried, "Lead me to the fleece this moment, before the sun goes down."

But Æetes thought, "He has conquered the bulls, and sown and reaped the deadly crop. Who is this who is proof against all magic? He may kill the serpent yet." So he delayed, and sat taking counsel with his princes till the sun went down, and all was dark. Then he bade a herald cry, "Every man to his home for to-night. To-morrow we will meet these heroes, and speak about the golden fleece."

Then he turned and looked at Medea: "This is your doing, false witch-maid! You have helped these yellow-haired strangers, and brought shame upon your father and yourself!"

Medea shrank and trembled, and her face grew pale with fear; and Æetes knew that she was guilty, and whispered, "If they win the fleece, you die!"

But the Minyæ marched toward their ship, growling like lions cheated of their prey; for they saw that Æetes meant to mock them, and to cheat them out of all their toil. And Oileus said, "Let us go to the grove together, and take the fleece by force."

And Idas the rash cried, "Let us draw lots who shall go in first; for while the dragon is devouring one, the rest can slay him, and carry off the fleece in peace." But Jason held them back, though he praised them; for he hoped for Medea's help.

And after awhile Medea came trembling, and wept a long while before she spoke. And at last, —

"My end is come, and I must die; for my father has found out that I have helped you. You he would kill if he dared, but he will not harm you because you have been his guests. Go then, go, and remember poor Medea when you are far away across the sea." But all the heroes cried, —

"If you die, we die with you; for without you we cannot win the fleece, and home we will not go without it, but fall here fighting to the last man."

"You need not die," said Jason. "Flee home with us across the sea. Show us first how to win the fleece, for you can do it. Why else are you the priestess of the grove? Show us but how to win the fleece, and come with us, and you shall be my queen, and rule over the rich princes of the Minyæ, in Iolcus by the sea."

And all the heroes pressed round, and vowed to her that she should be their queen.

Medea wept, and shuddered, and hid her face in her hands; for her heart yearned after her sisters and her playfellows, and the home where she was brought up as a child. But at last she looked up at Jason, and spoke between her sobs, —

"Must I leave my home and my people to wander with strangers across the sea? The lot is cast, and I must endure it. I will show you how to win the golden fleece. Bring up your ship to the woodside, and moor her there against the bank; and let Jason come up at midnight, and one brave comrade with him, and meet me beneath the wall."

Then all the heroes cried together, — "I will go!" "and I!" "and I!" And Idas the rash grew mad with envy; for he longed to be foremost in all things. But Medea calmed them, and said, "Orpheus shall go with Jason, and bring his magic harp; for I hear of him that he is the king of all minstrels, and can charm all things on earth."

And Orpheus laughed for joy, and clapped his hands, because the choice had fallen on him; for in those days poets and singers were as bold warriors as the best.

So at midnight they went up the bank, and found Medea; and beside came Absyrtus her young brother, leading a yearling lamb.

Then Medea brought them to a thicket, beside the War-god's gate; and there she bade Jason dig a ditch, and kill the lamb and leave it there, and strew on it magic herbs and honey from the honeycomb.

Then sprang up through the earth, with the red fire flashing before her, Brimo the wild witch-huntress, while her mad hounds howled around. She had one head like a horse's, and another like a ravening hound's, and another like a hissing snake's, and a sword in either hand. And she leapt into the ditch with her hounds, and they ate and drank their fill, while Jason and Orpheus trembled, and Medea hid her eyes. And at last the witch-queen vanished, and fled with her hounds into the woods; and the bars of the gates fell down, and the brazen doors flew wide, and Medea and the heroes ran forward and hurried through the poison wood, among the dark stems of the mighty beeches, guided by the gleam of the golden fleece, until they saw it hanging on one vast tree in the midst. And Jason would have sprung to seize it, but Medea held him back, and pointed shuddering to the tree-foot, where the mighty serpent lay, coiled in and out among the roots, with a body like a mountain-pine. His coils stretched many a fathom, spangled with bronze and gold ; and half of him they could see, but no more ; for the rest lay in the darkness far beyond.

GREEK HEROES. — PAGE 93.

And when he saw them coming, he lifted up his head, and watched them with his small bright eyes, and flashed his forked tongue, and roared like the fire among the woodlands, till the forest tossed and groaned. For his cry shook the trees from leaf to root, and swept over the long reaches of the river, and over Æetes's hall, and woke the sleepers in the city, till mothers clasped their children in their fear.

But Medea called gently to him ; and he stretched out his long spotted neck, and licked her hand, and looked up in her face, as if to ask for food. Then she made a sign to Orpheus, and he began his magic song.

And as he sung, the forest grew calm again, and the leaves on every tree hung still ; and the serpent's head sank down, and his brazen coils grew limp, and his glittering eyes closed lazily, till he breathed as gently as a child, while Orpheus called to pleasant Slumber, who gives peace to men, and beasts, and waves.

Then Jason leapt forward warily, and stept across that mighty snake, and tore the fleece from off the tree-trunk ; and the four rushed down the garden, to the bank where the Argo lay.

There was a silence for a moment, while Jason held the golden fleece on high. Then he cried, — "Go now, good Argo, swift and steady, if ever you would see Pelion more."

And she went, as the heroes drove her, grim and silent all, with muffled oars, till the pine-wood bent like willow in their hands, and stout Argo groaned beneath their strokes.

On and on, beneath the dewy darkness, they fled swiftly down the swirling stream; underneath black walls, and temples, and the castles of the princes of the East; past sluice-mouths, and fragrant gardens, and groves of all strange fruits; past marshes where fat kine lay sleeping, and long beds of whispering reeds; till they heard the merry music of the surge upon the bar, as it tumbled in the moonlight all alone.

Into the surge they rushed, and Argo leapt the breakers like a horse; for she knew the time was come to show her mettle, and win honor for the heroes and herself.

Into the surge they rushed, and Argo leapt the breakers like a horse, till the heroes stopped all panting, each man upon his oar, as she slid into the still, broad sea.

Then Orpheus took his harp and sang a pæan,¹ till the heroes' hearts rose high again; and they rowed on stoutly and steadfastly, away into the darkness of the West.

¹ A chant of thanksgiving for deliverance from danger.

PART V.

HOW THE ARGONAUTS WERE DRIVEN INTO THE UNKNOWN SEA.

So they fled away in haste to the westward : but Æetes manned his fleet and followed them. And Lynceus the quick-eyed saw him coming, while he was still many a mile away, and cried, "I see a hundred ships, like a flock of white swans, far in the east." And at that they rowed hard, like heroes ; but the ships came nearer every hour.

Then Medea, the dark witch-maiden, laid a cruel and a cunning plot ; for she killed Absyrtus her young brother, and cast him into the sea, and said, "Ere my father can take up his corpse and bury it, he must wait long, and be left far behind."

And all the heroes shuddered, and looked one at the other for shame ; yet they did not punish that dark witch-woman, because she had won for them the golden fleece.

And when Æetes came to the place, he saw the floating corpse ; and he stopped a long while, and bewailed his son, and took him up, and went home. But he sent on his sailors toward the westward, and bound them by a mighty curse : "Bring back to me that dark witch-woman, that she may die a dreadful death. But if you return without her, you shall die by the same death yourselves."

So the Argonauts escaped for that time : but Father Zeus saw that foul crime ; and out of the heavens he sent a storm, and swept the ship far from her course. Day after day the storm drove her, amid foam and blinding mist, till they knew no longer where they were, for the sun was blotted from the skies. And at last the ship struck on a shoal, amid low isles of mud and sand, and the waves rolled over her and through her, and the heroes lost all hope of life.

Then Jason cried to Hera: "Fair queen, who hast befriended us till now, why hast thou left us in our misery, to die here among unknown seas? It is hard to lose the honor which we have won with such toil and danger, and hard never to see Hellas again, and the pleasant bay of Pagasæ."

Then out and spoke the magic bough which stood upon the Argo's beak: "Because Father Zeus is angry, all this has fallen on you; for a cruel crime has been done on board, and the sacred ship is foul with blood."

At that some of the heroes cried: "Medea is the murderess. Let the witch-woman bear her sin, and die!" And they seized Medea, to hurl her into the sea and atone for the young boy's death: but the magic bough spoke again: "Let her live till her crimes are full. Vengeance waits for her, slow and sure; but she must live, for you need her still. She must show you the way to her sister Circe, who lives among the islands of the West. To her you must sail, a weary way, and she shall cleanse you from your guilt."

Then all the heroes wept aloud when they heard the sentence of the oak; for they knew that a dark journey lay before them, and years of bitter toil. And some upbraided the dark witch-woman, and some said, "Nay, we are her debtors still; without her we should never have won the fleece." But most of them bit their lips in silence, for they feared the witch's spells.

And now the sea grew calmer, and the sun shone out once more, and the heroes thrust the ship off the sand-bank, and rowed forward on their weary course, under the guiding of the dark witch-maiden, into the wastes of the unknown sea.

Whither they went I cannot tell, nor how they came to Circe's isle. Some say that they went to the westward, and up the Ister stream, and so came into the Adriatic, dragging their ship over the snowy Alps. And others say that they went southward, into the Red Indian Sea, and past the sunny lands where spices grow, round Æthiopia toward the West; and that at last they came to Libya, and dragged their ship across the burning sands, and over the hills into the Syrtes, where the flats and quicksands spread for many a mile, between rich Cyrene and the Lotus-eaters' shore.¹ But all these are but dreams and fables, and dim hints of unknown lands.

But all say that they came to a place where they had to drag their ship across the land nine days with ropes and rollers, till they came into an unknown sea. And the best of all the old songs tells us, how they went away toward the North, till they came to the slope of Caucasus, where it sinks into the sea; and to the narrow Cimmerian Bosphorus,² where the Titan swam across upon the bull; and thence into the lazy waters of the still Mæotid lake.³ And thence they went northward ever, up the Tanais, which we call Don, past the Geloni and Sauromatæ, and many a wandering shepherd-tribe, and the one-eyed

¹ The modern Tunis and Tripoli. The plant which is supposed to be the lotus of the ancients, bears a sweetish, saffron-colored fruit, about as large as a wild plum. According to Homer, the taste of the lotus was so delicious that those who ate it lost all desire to return to their native land.

² Between the Crimea and Circassia.

³ The modern Sea of Azof.

Arimaspi, of whom old Greek poets tell, who steal the gold from the Griffins,¹ in the cold Rhipæan² hills.

And they passed the Scythian archers, and the Tauri who eat men, and the wandering Hyperborei, who feed their flocks beneath the pole-star, until they came into the northern ocean, the dull dead Cronian Sea.³ And there Argo would move on no longer; and each man clasped his elbow, and leaned his head upon his hand, heart-broken with toil and hunger, and gave himself up to death. But brave Ancæus the helmsman cheered up their hearts once more, and bade them leap on land, and haul the ship with ropes and rollers for many a weary day, whether over land, or mud, or ice, I know not, for the song is mixed and broken like a dream. And it says next, how they came to the rich nation of the famous long-lived men; and to the coast of the Cimmerians,⁴ who never saw the sun, buried deep in the glens of the snow mountains; and to the fair land of Hermione, where dwelt the most righteous of all nations; and to the gates of the world below, and to the dwelling-place of dreams.

And at last Ancæus shouted — “Endure a little while, brave friends, the worst is surely past; for I can see the pure west wind ruffle the water, and hear the roar of ocean on the sands. So raise up the mast, and set the sail, and face what comes like men.”

Then out spoke the magic bough — “Ah, would that I had perished long ago, and been whelmed by the dread blue rocks, beneath the fierce swell of the Euxine! Bet-

¹ Monsters having the head and wings of an eagle and the body of a lion.

² The Ural mountains(?).

³ The Baltic(?).

⁴ A mythical people, not to be confounded with the Cimmerians who dwelt near the Cimmerian Bosphorus.

ter so, than to wander forever, disgraced by the guilt of my princes; for the blood of Absyrtus still tracks me, and woe follows hard upon woe. And now some dark horror will clutch me, if I come near the Isle of Ierne.¹ Unless you will cling to the land, and sail southward and southward forever, I shall wander beyond the Atlantic, to the ocean which has no shore."

Then they blest the magic bough, and sailed southward along the land. But ere they could pass Ierne, the land of mists and storms, the wild wind came down, dark and roaring, and caught the sail, and strained the ropes. And away they drove twelve nights, on the wide wild western sea, through the foam, and over the rollers, while they saw neither sun nor stars. And they cried again, "We shall perish, for we know not where we are. We are lost in the dreary damp darkness, and cannot tell north from south."

But Lynceus the long-sighted called gayly from the bows, — "Take heart again, brave sailors, for I see a pine-clad isle, and the halls of the kind Earth-mother, with a crown of clouds around them."

But Orpheus said, "Turn from them, for no living man can land there: there is no harbor on the coast, but steep-walled cliffs all round."

So Ancæus turned the ship away; and for three days more they sailed on, till they came to Ææa, Circe's home, and the fairy island of the West.²

And there Jason bid them land, and seek about for any sign of living man. And as they went inland, Circe met them, coming down toward the ship; and they trembled when they saw her; for her hair, and face, and robes shone like flame.

¹ Ireland(?).

² The Azores(?).

And she came and looked at Medea; and Medea hid her face beneath her vail.

And Circe cried, "Ah, wretched girl, have you forgotten all your sins, that you come hither to my island, where the flowers bloom all the year round? Where is your aged father, and the brother whom you killed? Little do I expect you to return in safety with these strangers whom you love. I will send you food and wine: but your ship must not stay here, for it is foul with sin, and foul with sin its crew."

And the heroes prayed her, but in vain, and cried, "Cleansed us from our guilt!" But she sent them away, and said, "Go on to Malea, and there you may be cleansed, and return home."

Then a fair wind rose, and they sailed eastward, by Tartessus on the Iberian shore, till they came to the Pillars of Hercules,¹ and the Mediterranean Sea. And thence they sailed on through the deeps of Sardinia, and past the Ausonian² islands and the capes of the Tyrrhenian³ shore, till they came to a flowery island, upon a still, bright summer's eve. And as they neared it, slowly and wearily, they heard sweet songs upon the shore. But when Medea heard it, she started, and cried, "Beware, all heroes, for these are the rocks of the Sirens. You must pass close by them, for there is no other channel, but those who listen to that song are lost."

¹ Mt. Abyla, on the African side of the Strait of Gibraltar, and Mt. Calpe, on the Spanish side, were called the Pillars of Hercules by the ancients, from a tradition that the two had originally formed one mountain, which had been rent asunder by Hercules.

² Ausonia lay along the western shore of middle and lower Italy; the name is often used by the poets for Italy.

³ Tyrrhenia was on the west coast of Italy, north of Ausonia; the poets often used the name to designate Italy.

Then Orpheus spoke, the king of all minstrels, — "Let them match their song against mine. I have charmed stones, and trees, and dragons, how much more the hearts of men!" So he caught up his lyre, and stood upon the poop, and began his magic song.

And now they could see the Sirens on Anthemusa, the flowery isle; three fair maidens sitting on the beach, beneath a red rock in the setting sun, among beds of crimson poppies and golden asphodel. Slowly they sung and sleepily, with silver voices, mild and clear, which stole over the golden waters and into the hearts of all the heroes in spite of Orpheus's song.

And all things stayed around and listened; the gulls sat in white lines along the rocks; on the beach great seals lay basking, and kept time with lazy heads; while silver shoals of fish came up to hearken, and whispered as they broke the shining calm. The Wind overhead hushed his whistling, as he shepherd his clouds toward the west; and the clouds stood in mid blue, and listened dreaming, like a flock of golden sheep.

And as the heroes listened, the oars fell from their hands, and their heads drooped on their breasts, and they closed their heavy eyes; and they dreamed of bright still gardens, and of slumbers under murmuring pines, till all their toil seemed foolishness, and they thought of their renown no more.

Then one lifted his head suddenly, and cried, "What use in wandering forever? Let us stay here and rest awhile." And another, "Let us row to the shore, and hear the words they sing." And another, "I care not for the words, but for the music. They shall sing me to sleep, that I may rest."

And Butes, the son of Pandion, the fairest of all mortal men, leapt out and swam toward the shore, crying, "I come, I come, fair maidens, to live and die here, listening to your song."

Then Medea clapped her hands together, and cried, "Sing louder, Orpheus, sing a bolder strain; wake up these hapless sluggards, or none of them will see the land of Hellas more."

Then Orpheus lifted his harp, and crashed his cunning hand across the strings; and his music and his voice rose like a trumpet through the still evening air; into the air it rushed like thunder, till the rocks rang and the sea; and into their souls it rushed like wine, till all hearts beat fast within their breasts.

And he sung the song of Perseus, how the gods led him over land and sea, and how he slew the loathly Gorgon, and won himself a peerless bride; and how he sits now with the gods upon Olympus, a shining star in the sky, immortal with his immortal bride, and honored by all men below.

So Orpheus sang, and the Sirens, answering each other across the golden sea, till Orpheus's voice drowned the Sirens', and the heroes caught their oars again.

And they cried, "We will be men like Perseus, and we will dare and suffer to the last. Sing us his song again, brave Orpheus, that we may forget the Sirens and their spell."

And as Orpheus sang, they dashed their oars into the sea, and kept time to his music, as they fled fast away; and the Sirens' voices died behind them, in the hissing of the foam along their wake.

But Butes swam to the shore, and knelt down before the Sirens, and cried, "Sing on! sing on!" But he could say no more; for a charmed sleep came over him, and a pleasant humming in his ears ; and he sank all along upon the pebbles, and forgot all heaven and earth, and never looked at that sad beach around him, all strewn with the bones of men.

Then slowly rose up those three fair sisters, with a cruel smile upon their lips ; and slowly they crept down towards him, like leopards who creep upon their prey ; and their hands were like the talons of eagles, as they stept across the bones of their victims to enjoy their cruel feast.

But fairest Aphrodite saw him from the highest Italian peak, and she pitied his youth and his beauty, and leapt up from her golden throne ; and like a falling star she cleft the sky, and left a trail of glittering light, till she stooped to the Isle of the Sirens, and snatched their prey from their claws. And she lifted Butes as he lay sleeping, and wrapt him in a golden mist ; and she bore him to the peak of Lilybæum ; and he slept there many a pleasant year.

But when the Sirens saw that they were conquered, they shrieked for envy and rage, and leapt from the beach into the sea, and were changed into rocks until this day.

Then they came to the straits by Lilybæum, and saw Sicily, the three-cornered island, under which Enceladus the giant lies groaning day and night, and when he turns the earth quakes, and his breath bursts out in roaring flames from the highest cone of Ætna, above the chestnut woods. And there Charybdis¹ caught them in its fearful coils of wave, and rolled mast-high about them, and spun them round and round ; and they could go neither back nor forward, while the whirlpool sucked them in.

¹ The modern Galofaro, a meeting-place of currents on the Sicilian side of the Strait of Messina, much dreaded by the ancients. It is now seldom dangerous.

And while they struggled they saw near them, on the other side the strait, a rock stand in the water, with a peak wrapt round in clouds ; a rock¹ which no man could climb, though he had twenty hands and feet, for the stone was smooth and slippery, as if polished by man's hand ; and half way up a misty cave looked out toward the west.

And when Orpheus saw it, he groaned, and struck his hands together. And "Little will it help to us," he cried, "to escape the jaws of the whirlpool ; for in that cave lives Scylla, the sea-hag with a young whelp's voice ; my mother warned me of her ere we sailed away from Hellas ; she has six heads, and six long necks, and hides in that dark cleft. And from her cave she fishes for all things which pass by, for sharks, and seals, and dolphins, and all the herds of Amphitrite.² And never ship's crew boasted that they came safe by her rock ; for she bends her long necks down to them, and every mouth takes up a man. And who will help us now ? For Hera and Zeus hate us, and our ship is foul with guilt ; so we must die, whatever befalls."

Then out of the depths came Thetis, Peleus's silver-footed bride, for love of her gallant husband, and all her nymphs around her ; and they played like snow-white dolphins, diving on from wave to wave, before the ship, and in her wake, and beside her, as dolphins play. And they caught the ship, and guided her, and passed her on from hand to hand, and tossed her through the billows as maidens toss the ball. And when Scylla stooped to seize her, they struck back her ravening heads, and foul Scylla whined, as a whelp whines, at the touch of their gentle hands. But she shrank into her cave affrighted, for all bad things shrink from good; and Argo leapt safe past her, while a fair breeze rose behind. Then Thetis and her nymphs sank down to their coral caves beneath the sea, and their gardens of green and purple, where live flowers bloom all the year round; while the heroes went on rejoicing, yet dreading what might come next.

¹ The modern Scoglio, a rocky headland on the Italian side of the Strait of Messina. Some of the more formidable rocks have been removed in modern times by blasting.

² Wife of Poseidon and goddess of the sea, especially of the Mediterranean sea.

After that they rowed on steadily for many a weary day, till they saw a long, high island, and beyond it a mountain land. And they searched till they found a harbor, and there rowed boldly in. But after awhile they stopped, and wondered; for there stood a great city on the shore, and temples and walls and gardens, and castles high in air upon the cliffs. And on either side they saw a harbor with a narrow mouth, but wide within; and black ships without number, high and dry upon the shore.

Then Ancæus, the wise helmsman, spoke, "What new wonder is this? I know all isles, and harbors, and the windings of all seas; and this should be Corcyra, where a few wild goatherds dwell. But whence come these new harbors, and vast works of polished stone?"

But Jason said, "They can be no savage people. We will go in and take our chance."

So they rowed into the harbor, among a thousand black-beaked ships, each larger far than Argo, toward a quay of polished stone. And they wondered at that mighty city, with its roofs of burnished brass, and long and lofty walls of marble, with strong palisades above. And the quays were full of people, merchants, and mariners, and slaves, going to and fro with merchandise among the crowd of ships. And the heroes' hearts were humbled, and they looked at each other and said, "We thought ourselves a gallant crew when we sailed from Iolcus by the sea: but how small we look before this city, like an ant before a hive of bees."

Then the sailors hailed them roughly from the quay, "What men are you?—we want no strangers here, nor pirates. We keep our business to ourselves."

But Jason answered gently, with many a flattering word, and praised their city and their harbor, and their fleet of gallant ships. "Surely you are the children of Poseidon, and the masters of the sea; and we are but poor wandering mariners, worn out with thirst and toil. Give us but food and water, and we will go on our voyage in peace."

Then the sailors laughed, and answered, "Stranger, you are no fool; you talk like an honest man, and you shall find us honest, too. We are the children of Poseidon, and the masters of the sea; but come ashore to us, and you shall have the best that we can give."

So they limped ashore, all stiff and weary, with long, ragged beards and sunburnt cheeks, and garments torn and weather-stained, and weapons rusted with the spray, while the sailors laughed at them (for they were rough-tongued, though their hearts were frank and kind). And one said, "These fellows are but raw sailors; they look as if they had been sea-sick all the day." And another, "Their legs have grown crooked with much rowing, till they waddle in their walk like ducks."

At that Idas the rash would have struck them; but Jason held him back, till one of the merchant kings spoke to them, a tall and stately man.

"Do not be angry, strangers; the sailor boys must have their jest. But we will treat you justly and kindly, for strangers and poor men come from God; and you seem no common sailors by your strength, and height, and weapons. Come up with me to the palace of Alcinous, the rich, sea-going king, and we will feast you well and heartily; and after that you shall tell us your name."

But Medea hung back, and trembled, and whispered in Jason's ear, "We are betrayed, and are going to our ruin; for I see my countrymen among the crowd; dark-eyed Colchi in steel mail-shirts, such as they wear in my father's land."

"It is too late to turn," said Jason. And he spoke to the merchant king, — "What country is this, good sir; and what is this new-built town?"

"This is the land of the Phæaces, beloved by all the Immortals; for they come hither and feast like friends with us, and sit by our side in the hall. Hither we came from Liburnia,¹ to escape the unrighteous Cyclopes²; for they robbed us, peaceful merchants, of our hard-earned wares and wealth. So Nausithous, the son of Poseidon, brought us hither, and died in peace; and now his son Alcinous rules us, and Arete the wisest of queens."

So they went up across the square, and wondered still more as they went; for along the quays lay in order great cables, and yards, and masts, before the fair temple of Poseidon, the blue-haired king of the seas. And round the square worked the shipwrights, as many in number as ants, twining ropes, and hewing timber, and smoothing long yards and oars. And the Minyæ went on in silence through clean white marble streets, till they came to the hall of Alcinous, and they wondered then still more. For the lofty palace shone aloft in the sun, with walls of plated brass, from the threshold to the innermost chamber, and the doors were of silver and gold. And on each side of the doorway sat living dogs of gold, who never grew old or died, so well Hephæstus had made them in his forges in smoking Lemnos, and given them to Alcinous to guard his gates by night. And within, against the walls, stood thrones on either side, down the whole length of the hall, strewn with rich, glossy shawls; and on them the merchant kings of those crafty, sea-roving Phæaces sat eating and drinking in pride, and feasting there all the year round. And boys of molten gold stood each on a polished altar, and held torches in their hands, to give light all night to the guests. And round the house sat fifty maid-servants, some grinding the meal in the mill, some turning the spindle, some weaving at the loom, while their hands twinkled as they passed the shuttle, like quivering aspen leaves.

¹ Liburnia, on the eastern coast of the Adriatic, was the home of a race of hardy mariners who controlled the neighboring waters and islands.

² A race of one-eyed, man-eating giants.

And outside, before the palace, a great garden was walled round, filled full of stately fruit-trees, with olives and sweet figs, and pomegranates, pears, and apples, which bore the whole year round. For the rich, southwest wind fed them, till pear grew ripe on pear, fig on fig, and grape on grape, all the winter and the spring. And at the further end gay flower-beds bloomed through all seasons of the year; and two fair fountains rose, and ran, one through the garden-grounds, and one beneath the palace gate, to water all the town. Such noble gifts the heavens had given to Alcinous the wise.

So they went in, and saw him sitting, like Poseidon, on his throne, with his golden sceptre by him, in garments stiff with gold, and in his hand a sculptured goblet, as he pledged the merchant kings; and beside him stood Arete, his wise and lovely queen, and leaned against a pillar, as she spun her golden threads.

Then Alcinous rose, and welcomed them, and bade them sit and eat; and the servants brought them tables, and bread, and meat, and wine.

But Medea went on trembling toward Arete the fair queen, and fell at her knees, and clasped them, and cried, weeping as she knelt, —

“I am your guest, fair queen, and I entreat you by Zeus, from whom prayers come. Do not send me back to my father, to die some dreadful death; but let me go my way, and bear my burden. Have I not had enough of punishment and shame?”

“Who are you, strange maiden? and what is the meaning of your prayer?”

“I am Medea, daughter of Æetes, and I saw my countrymen here to-day; and I know that they are come to find me, and take me home to die some dreadful death.”

Then Arete frowned, and said, — “Lead this girl in, my maidens; and let the kings decide, not me.”

And Alcinous leapt up from his throne, and cried, “Speak, strangers, who are you? And who is this maiden?”

“We are the heroes of the Minyæ,” said Jason; “and this maiden has spoken truth. We are the men who took the golden fleece, the men whose fame has run round every shore. We came hither out of the ocean, after sorrows such as man never saw before. We went out many, and come back few, for many a noble comrade have we lost. So let us go, as you should let your guests go, in peace; that the world may say, ‘Alcinous is a just king.’”

But Alcinous frowned, and stood deep in thought ; and at last he spoke, —

“Had not the deed been done which is done, I should have said this day to myself, ‘It is an honor to Alcinous, and to his children after him, that the far-famed Argonauts are his guests.’ But these Colchi are my guests, as you are ; and for this month they have waited here with all their fleet ; for they have hunted all the seas of Hellas, and could not find you, and dared neither go further, nor go home.”

“Let them choose out their champions, and we will fight them, man for man.”

“No guest of ours shall fight upon our own island ; and if you go outside, they will outnumber you. I will do justice between you, for I know and do what is right.”

Then he turned to his kings, and said : “This may stand over till to-morrow. To-night we will feast our guests, and hear the story of all their wanderings, and how they came hither out of the ocean.”

So Alcinous bade the servants take the heroes in, and bathe them, and give them clothes. And they were glad when they saw the warm water, for it was long since they had bathed. And they washed off the sea-salt from their limbs, and anointed themselves from head to foot with oil, and combed out their golden hair. Then they came back again into the hall, while the merchant-kings rose up to do them honor. And each man said to his neighbor : “No wonder that these men won fame. How they stand now like Giants, or Titans, or Immortals come down from Olympus, though many a winter has worn them, and many a fearful storm. What must they have been when they sailed from Iolcus, in the bloom of their youth, long ago ?”

Then they went out to the garden, and the merchant-princes said, "Heroes, run races with us. Let us see whose feet are nimblest."

"We cannot race against you, for our limbs are stiff from sea; and we have lost our two swift comrades, the sons of the North Wind. But do not think us cowards: if you wish to try our strength, we will shoot, and box, and wrestle, against any men on earth."

And Alcinous smiled, and answered, "I believe you, gallant guests; with your long limbs and broad shoulders, we could never match you here. For we care nothing for boxing, or shooting with the bow, but for feasts, and songs, and harping, and dancing, and running races, to stretch our limbs on shore."

So they danced there and ran races, the jolly merchant-kings, till the night fell, and all went in.

And then they ate and drank, and comforted their weary souls, till Alcinous called a herald, and bade him go and fetch the harper.

The herald went out, and fetched the harper, and led him in by the hand; and Alcinous cut him a piece of meat from the fattest of the haunch, and sent it to him, and said: "Sing to us, noble harper, and rejoice the heroes' hearts."

So the harper played and sang, while the dancers danced strange figures; and after that the tumblers showed their tricks, till the heroes laughed again.

Then, "Tell me, heroes," asked Alcinous, "you who have sailed the ocean round, and seen the manners of all nations, have you seen such dancers as ours here? or heard such music and such singing? We hold ours to be the best on earth."

"Such dancing we have never seen," said Orpheus; "and your singer is a happy man; for Phœbus himself must have taught him, or else he is the son of a Muse ; as I am also, and have sung once or twice, though not so well as he."

"Sing to us, then, noble stranger," said Alcinous ; "and we will give you precious gifts."

So Orpheus took his magic harp, and sang to them a stirring song of their voyage from Iolcus, and their dangers, and how they won the golden fleece ; and of Medea's love, and how she helped them, and went with them over land and sea ; and of all their fearful dangers, from monsters, and rocks, and storms, till the heart of Arete was softened, and all the women wept. And the merchant-kings rose up, each man from off his golden throne, and clapped their hands, and shouted : "Hail to the noble Argonauts, who sailed the unknown sea !"

Then he went on, and told their journey over the sluggish northern main, and through the shoreless outer ocean, to the fairy island of the west ; and of the Sirens, and Scylla, and Charybdis, and all the wonders they had seen, till midnight passed, and the day dawned ; but the kings never thought of sleep. Each man sat still and listened, with his chin upon his hand.

And at last, when Orpheus had ended, they all went thoughtful out, and the heroes lay down to sleep beneath the sounding porch outside, where Arete had strewn them rugs and carpets, in the sweet still summer night.

But Arete pleaded hard with her husband for Medea, for her heart was softened. And she said : "The gods will punish her, not we. After all, she is our guest and my suppliant, and prayers are the daughters of Zeus. And who, too, dare part man and wife, after all they have endured together?"

And Alcinous smiled. "The minstrel's song has charmed you ; but I must remember what is right, for songs cannot alter justice ; and I must be faithful to my name. Alcinous I am called, the man of sturdy sense,¹ and Alcinous I will be." But for all that, Arete besought him until she won him round.

So next morning he sent a herald, and called the kings into the square, and said : "This is a puzzling matter ; remember but one thing. These Minyæ live close by us, and we may meet them often on the seas ; but Æetes lives afar off, and we have only heard his name. Which, then, of the two is it safer to offend, the men near us, or the men far off ?"

The princes laughed, and praised his wisdom ; and Alcinous called the heroes to the square, and the Colchi also ; and they came and stood opposite each other ; but Medea stayed in the palace. Then Alcinous spoke,— "Heroes of the Colchi, what is your errand about this lady ?"

"To carry her home with us, that she may die a shameful death : but if we return without her, we must die the death she should have died."

"What say you to this, Jason the Æolid ?" said Alcinous, turning to the Minyæ.

"I say," said the cunning Jason, "that they are come here on a bootless errand. Do you think that you can make her follow you, heroes of the Colchi ? her, who knows all spells and charms ? She will cast away your ships on quicksands, or call down on you Brimo the wild huntress ; or the chains will fall from off her wrists, and she will escape in her dragon-car ; or if not thus, some other way ; for she has a thousand plans and wiles. And why return home at all, brave heroes, and face the long seas again, and the Bosphorus, and the stormy Euxine, and double all your toil? There is many a fair land round these coasts, which waits for gallant men like you. Better to settle there, and build a city, and let Æetes and Colchis help themselves."

¹ Translation of the Greek name Alcinous.

Then a murmur rose among the Colchi, and some cried, "He has spoken well"; and some, "We have had enough of roving; we will sail the seas no more!" And the chief said at last, "Be it so, then; a plague she has been to us, and a plague to the house of her father, and a plague she will be to you. Take her, since you are no wiser; and we will sail away toward the north."

Then Alcinous gave them food, and water, and garments, and rich presents of all sorts; and he gave the same to the Minyæ, and sent them all away in peace.

So Jason kept the dark witch-maiden to breed him woe and shame; and the Colchi went northward into the Adriatic, and settled, and built towns along the shore.

Then the heroes rowed away to the eastward, to reach Hellas, their beloved land; but a storm came down upon them, and swept them far away toward the south. And they rowed till they were spent with struggling, through the darkness and the blinding rain, but where they were they could not tell, and they gave up all hope of life. And at last they touched the ground, and when daylight came they waded to the shore; and saw nothing round but sand, and desolate salt pools; for they had come to the quicksands of the Syrtis, and the dreary, treeless flats which lie between Numidia and Cyrene, on the burning shore of Africa. And there they wandered, starving, for many a weary day, ere they could launch their ship again, and gain the open sea. And there Canthus was killed while he was trying to drive off sheep, by a stone which a herdsman threw.

And there too Mopsus died, the seer who knew the voices of all birds : but he could not foretell his own end, for he was bitten in the foot by a snake, one of those which sprang from the Gorgon's head when Perseus carried it across the sands.

At last they rowed away toward the northward, for many a weary day, till their water was spent, and their food eaten ; and they were worn out with hunger and thirst. But at last they saw a long, steep island, and a blue peak high among the clouds ; and they knew it for the peak of Ida, and the famous land of Crete. And they said, " We will land in Crete, and see Minos the just king, and all his glory and his wealth ; at least he will treat us hospitably, and let us fill our water-casks upon the shore."

But when they came nearer to the island they saw a wondrous sight upon the cliffs. For on a cape to the westward stood a giant, taller than any mountain pine, who glittered aloft against the sky like a tower of burnished brass. He turned and looked on all sides round him, till he saw the Argo and her crew ; and when he saw them he came toward them, more swiftly than the swiftest horse, leaping across the glens at a bound, and striding at one step from down to down. And when he came abreast of them he brandished his arms up and down, as a ship hoists and lowers her yards, and shouted with his brazen throat like a trumpet from off the hills, — " You are pirates, you are robbers ! If you dare land here, you die."

Then the heroes cried, " We are no pirates. We are all good men and true, and all we ask is food and water " : but the Giant cried the more —

" You are robbers, you are pirates all ; I know you ; and if you land you shall die the death."

Then he waved his arms again as a signal, and they saw the people flying inland, driving their flocks before them, while a great flame arose among the hills. Then the giant ran up a valley and vanished; and the heroes lay on their oars in fear.

But Medea stood watching all from under her steep black brows, with a cunning smile upon her lips, and a cunning plot within her heart. At last she spoke: "I know this giant. I heard of him in the East. Hephæstus the Fire King made him, in his forge in Ætna beneath the earth, and called him Talos, and gave him to Minos for a servant, to guard the coast of Crete. Thrice a day he walks round the island, and never stops to sleep; and if strangers land he leaps into his furnace, which flames there among the hills; and when he is red-hot he rushes on them, and burns them in his brazen hands."

Then all the heroes cried, "What shall we do, wise Medea? We must have water, or we die of thirst. Flesh and blood we can face fairly; but who can face this red-hot brass?"

"I can face red-hot brass, if the tale I hear be true. For they say that he has but one vein in all his body, filled with liquid fire, and that this vein is closed with a nail; but I know not where that nail is placed. But if I can get it once into these hands, you shall water your ship here in peace."

Then she bade them put her on shore, and row off again, and wait what would befall.

And the heroes obeyed her unwillingly, for they were ashamed to leave her so alone; but Jason said, "She is dearer to me than to any of you, yet I will trust her freely on shore; she has more plots than we can dream of, in the windings of that fair and cunning head."

So they left the witch-maiden on the shore; and she stood there in her beauty all alone, till the giant strode back red-hot from head to heel, while the grass hissed and smoked beneath his tread.

And when he saw the maiden alone, he stopped ; and she looked boldly up into his face without moving, and began her magic song :—

“Life is short, though life is sweet ; and even men of brass and fire must die. The brass must rust, the fire must cool, for time gnaws all things in their turn. Life is short, though life is sweet ; but sweeter to live forever ; sweeter to live ever youthful like the gods, who have ichor¹ in their veins ; ichor which gives life, and youth, and joy, and a bounding heart.”

Then Talos said, “Who are you, strange maiden ; and where is this ichor of youth ?”

Then Medea held up a flask of crystal, and said, “Here is the ichor of youth. I am Medea the enchantress ; my sister Circe gave me this, and said, ‘Go and reward Talos the faithful servant, for his fame is gone out into all lands.’ So come, and I will pour this into your veins, that you may live forever young.”

And he listened to her false words, that simple Talos, and came near ; and Medea said, “Dip yourself in the sea first, and cool yourself, lest you burn my tender hands ; then show me where the nail in your vein is, that I may pour the ichor in.”

Then that simple Talos dipped himself in the sea till it hissed, and roared, and smoked ; and came and knelt before Medea, and showed her the secret nail.

And she drew the nail out gently, but she poured no ichor in ; and instead, the liquid fire spouted forth, like a stream of red-hot iron. And Talos tried to leap up, crying, "You have betrayed me, false witch-maiden!" But she lifted up her hands before him, and sang, till he sank beneath her spell. And as he sank, his brazen limbs clanked heavily, and the earth groaned beneath his weight; and the liquid fire ran from his heel, like a stream of lava, to the sea; and Medea laughed, and called to the heroes, "Come ashore, and water your ship in peace."

¹ Name of the fluid that supplied the place of blood in the veins of the gods.

So they came, and found the giant lying dead; and they fell down, and kissed Medea's feet; and watered their ship, and took sheep and oxen, and so left that inhospitable shore.

At last, after many more adventures, they came to the Cape of Malea, at the southwest point of the Peloponnese. And there they offered sacrifices, and Orpheus purged them from their guilt. Then they rowed away again, to the northward, past the Laconian shore, and came all worn and tired by Sunium, and up the long Eubœan Strait, until they saw once more Pelion, and Aphetæ, and Iolcus by the sea.

And they ran the ship ashore, but they had no strength left to haul her up the beach; and they crawled out on the pebbles, and sat down, and wept till they could weep no more. For the houses and the trees were all altered; and all the faces which they saw were strange; and their joy was swallowed up in sorrow, while they thought of their youth, and all their labor, and the gallant comrades they had lost.

And the people crowded round, and asked them, "Who are you, that you sit weeping here?"

"We are the sons of your princes, who sailed out many a year ago. We went to fetch the golden fleece, and we have brought it, and grief therewith. Give us news of our fathers and our mothers, if any of them be left alive on earth."

Then there was shouting, and laughing, and weeping; and all the kings came to the shore, and they led away the heroes to their homes, and bewailed the valiant dead.

Then Jason went up with Medea to the palace of his uncle Pelias. And when he came in, Pelias sat by the hearth, crippled and blind with age; while opposite him sat Æson, Jason's father, crippled and blind likewise; and the two old men's heads shook together, as they tried to warm themselves before the fire.

And Jason fell down at his father's knees, and wept, and called him by his name. And the old man stretched his hands out, and felt him, and said, "Do not mock me, young hero. My son Jason is dead long ago at sea."

"I am your own son Jason, whom you trusted to the Centaur upon Pelion; and I have brought home the golden fleece, and a princess of the Sun's race for my bride. So now give me up the kingdom, Pelias my uncle, and fulfil your promise as I have fulfilled mine."

Then his father clung to him like a child, and wept, and would not let him go, and cried, "Now I shall not go down lonely to my grave. Promise me never to leave me till I die."

PART VI.

WHAT WAS THE END OF THE HEROES.

AND now I wish that I could end my story pleasantly ; but it is no fault of mine that I cannot. The old songs end it sadly, and I believe that they are right and wise ; for though the heroes were purified at Malea, yet sacrifices cannot make bad hearts good, and Jason had taken a wicked wife, and he had to bear his burden to the last.

And first she laid a cunning plot to punish that poor old Pelias, instead of letting him die in peace.

For she told his daughters, "I can make old things young again ; I will show you how easy it is to do." So she took an old ram and killed him, and put him in a cauldron with magic herbs, and whispered her spells over him, and he leapt out again a young lamb. So that "Medea's cauldron" is a proverb still, by which we mean times of war and change, when the world has become old and feeble, and grows young again through bitter pains.

Then she said to Pelias's daughters, "Do to your father as I did to this ram, and he will grow young and strong again." But she only told them half the spell ; so they failed, while Medea mocked them ; and poor old Pelias died, and his daughters came to misery. But the songs say she cured Æson, Jason's father, and he became young and strong again.

But Jason could not love her, after all her cruel deeds. So he was ungrateful to her, and wronged her : and she revenged herself on him. And a terrible revenge she took — too terrible to speak of here. But you will hear of it yourselves when you grow up, for it has been sung in noble poetry and music ; and whether it be true or not, it stands forever as a warning to us not to seek for help from evil persons, or to gain good ends by evil means. For if we use an adder, even against our enemies, it will turn again and sting us.

But of all the other heroes there is many a brave tale left, which I have no space to tell you, so you must read them for yourselves ; — of the hunting of the boar in Calydon, which Meleager killed ; and of Heracles's twelve famous labors ; and of the seven who fought at Thebes ; and of the noble love of Castor and Polydeuces, the twin Dioscuri¹ ; how when one died, the other would not live without him, so they shared their immortality between them ; and Zeus changed them into the two twin stars which never rise both at once.

And what became of Cheiron, the good immortal beast ? That, too, is a sad story ; for the heroes never saw him more. He was wounded by a poisoned arrow, at Pholoe among the hills, when Heracles opened the fatal wine-jar, which Cheiron had warned him not to touch. And the Centaurs smelt the wine, and flocked to it, and fought for it with Heracles ; but he killed them all with his poisoned arrows, and Cheiron was left alone. Then Cheiron took up one of the arrows, and dropped it by chance upon his foot ; and the poison ran like fire along his veins, and he lay down, and longed to die ; and cried, "Through wine I perish, the bane of all my race. Why should I live forever in this agony ? Who will take my immortality that I may die ?"

Then Prometheus answered, the good Titan, whom

¹ The name signifies sons of Zeus.

Heracles had set free from Caucasus, "I will take your immortality and live forever, that I may help poor mortal men." So Cheiron gave him his immortality, and died, and had rest from pain. And Heracles and Prometheus wept over him, and went to bury him on Pelion; but Zeus took him up among the stars, to live forever, grand and mild, low down in the far southern sky.

And in time the heroes died, all but Nestor the silver-tongued old man; and left behind them valiant sons, but not so great as they had been. Yet their fame, too, lives till this day; for they fought at the ten years' siege of Troy,¹ and their story is in the book which we call Homer, in two of the noblest songs on earth: the Iliad, which tells us of the siege of Troy, and Achilles's quarrel with the kings; and the Odyssey, which tells the wanderings of Odysseus through many lands for many years; and how Alcinous sent him home at last, safe to Ithaca his beloved island, and to Penelope his faithful wife, and Telemachus his son, and Euphorbus the noble swineherd, and the old dog who licked his hand and died. We will read that sweet story, children, by the fire some winter night. And now I will end my tale, and begin another and a more cheerful one, of a hero who became a worthy king, and won his people's love.

¹ See foot-note 5, p. 66.

STORY III.—THESEUS.

STORY III.—THESEUS.

PART I.

HOW THESEUS LIFTED THE STONE.

ONCE upon a time there was a princess in Trœzene, Æthra, the daughter of Pittheus the king. She had one fair son, named Theseus, the bravest lad in all the land ; and Æthra never smiled but when she looked at him, for her husband had forgotten her, and lived far away. And she used to go up to the mountain above Trœzene, to the temple of Poseidon, and sit there all day looking out across the bay, over Methana, to the purple peaks of Ægina, and the Attic shore beyond. And when Theseus was full fifteen years old, she took him up with her to the temple, and into the thickets of the grove which grew in the temple-yard. And she led him to a tall plane-tree, beneath whose shade grew arbutus, and lentisk, and purple heather-bushes. And there she sighed, and said, "Theseus, my son, go into that thicket, and you will find at the plane-tree foot a great flat stone ; lift it, and bring me what lies underneath."

Then Theseus pushed his way in through the thick bushes, and saw that they had not been moved for many a year. And searching among their roots he found a great flat stone, all overgrown with ivy, and acanthus, and moss. He tried to lift it, but he could not. And he tried till the sweat ran down his brow from heat, and the tears from his eyes for shame : but all was of no avail. And at last he came back to his mother, and said, "I have found the stone, but I cannot lift it ; nor do I think that any man could in all Trœzene."

Then she sighed, and said, "The gods wait long ; but they are just at last. Let it be for another year. The day may come when you will be a stronger man than lives in all Trœzene."

Then she took him by the hand, and went into the temple and prayed, and came down again with Theseus to her home.

And when a full year was past, she led Theseus up again to the temple, and bade him lift the stone : but he could not.

Then she sighed, and said the same words again, and went down, and came again the next year ; but Theseus could not lift the stone then, nor the year after ; and he longed to ask his mother the meaning of that stone, and what might lie underneath it ; but her face was so sad that he had not the heart to ask.

So he said to himself, "The day shall surely come when I will lift that stone, though no man in Trœzene can." And in order to grow strong he spent all his days in wrestling, and boxing, and hurling, and taming horses, and hunting the boar and the bull, and coursing goats and deer among the rocks, till upon all the mountains there was no hunter so swift as Theseus ; and he killed Phæa, the wild sow of Crommyon, which wasted all the land ; till all the people said, "Surely the gods are with the lad."

And when his eighteenth year was past, Æthra led him up again to the temple, and said, "Theseus, lift the stone this day, or never know who you are." And Theseus went into the thicket, and stood over the stone, and tugged at it; and it moved. Then his spirit swelled within him, and he said, "If I break my heart in my body, it shall up." And he tugged at it once more, and lifted it, and rolled it over with a shout.

And when he looked beneath it, on the ground lay a sword of bronze, with a hilt of glittering gold, and by it a pair of golden sandals; and he caught them up, and burst through the bushes like a wild boar, and leapt to his mother, holding them high above his head.

But when she saw them she wept long in silence, hiding her fair face in her shawl; and Theseus stood by her wondering, and wept also, he knew not why. And when she was tired of weeping, she lifted up her head, and laid her finger on her lips, and said, "Hide them in your bosom, Theseus my son, and come with me where we can look down upon the sea."

Then they went outside the sacred wall, and looked down over the bright blue sea; and Æthra said, —

"Do you see this land at our feet?"

And he said, "Yes, this is Trœzene, where I was born and bred."

And she said, "It is but a little land, barren and rocky, and looks toward the bleak northeast. Do you see that land beyond?"

"Yes; that is Attica, where the Athenian people dwell."

"That is a fair land and large, Theseus, my son; and it looks toward the sunny south; a land of olive-oil and honey, the joy of gods and men. For the gods have girdled it with mountains, whose veins are of pure silver, and their bones of marble white as snow; and there the hills are sweet with thyme and basil, and the meadows with violet and asphodel, and the nightingales sing all day in the thickets, by the side of ever-flowing streams. There are twelve towns well peopled, the homes of an ancient race, the children of Cecrops¹ the serpent-king, the son of Mother Earth, who wear gold cicalas among the tresses of their golden hair; for like the cicalas they sprang from the earth, and like the cicalas they sing all day, rejoicing in the genial sun. What would you do, son Theseus, if you were king of such a land?"

Then Theseus stood astonished, as he looked across the broad bright sea, and saw the fair Attic shore from Sunium to Hymettus and Pentelicus, and all the mountain peaks which girdle Athens round. But Athens itself he could not see, for purple Ægina stood before it, midway across the sea.

Then his heart grew great within him, and he said, "If I were king of such a land, I would rule it wisely and well in wisdom and in might, that when I died all men might weep over my tomb, and cry, 'Alas for the shepherd of his people!'"

And Æthra smiled, and said, "Take, then, the sword and the sandals, and go to Ægeus, king of Athens, who lives on Pallas's hill, and say to him, 'The stone is lifted, but whose is the pledge beneath it?' Then show him the sword and the sandals, and take what the gods shall send."

But Theseus wept—"Shall I leave you, O my mother?"

But she answered, "Weep not for me. That which is fated must be; and grief is easy to those who do naught but grieve. Full of sorrow was my youth, and full of sorrow my womanhood. Full of sorrow was my youth for Bellerophon¹ the slayer of the Chimæra,² whom my father drove away by treason; and full of sorrow my womanhood for thy treacherous father³ and for thee; and full of sorrow my old age will be (for I see my fate in dreams) when the sons of the Swan⁴ shall carry me captive to the hollow vale of Eurotas,⁵ till I sail across the seas a slave, the handmaid of the pest⁶ of Greece. Yet shall I be avenged when the golden-haired heroes sail against Troy, and sack the palaces of Ilium⁷; then my son shall set me free from thralldom, and I shall hear the tale of Theseus's fame. Yet beyond that I see new sorrows; but I can bear them as I have borne the past."

¹ Mythical king of Attica and founder of Athens. According to the legends, the upper part of his body had the form of a man; the lower, that of a serpent.

Then she kissed Theseus, and wept over him; and went into the temple, and Theseus saw her no more.

¹ Bellerophon, having unwittingly committed a murder, fled to Proetus, king of Tiryns, to be purified. Here he was falsely accused by the wife of Proetus, and was in consequence sent by Proetus to Iobates, king of Lycia, with a letter in which the latter was requested to put him to death. Iobates accordingly, believing that the youth would perish in the encounter, sent him to slay the Chimæra, a fire-breathing monster that was desolating Lycia. Bellerophon, however, having secured the winged horse Pegasus, mounted with him into the air, and slew the Chimæra with his darts. Mr. Kingsley appears here to confound Pittheus, the father of Æthra, with Proetus.

² A fire-breathing monster, the fore part of whose body had the form of a lion, the middle part that of a goat, and the hind part that of a dragon.

³ Ægeus had contracted a secret marriage with Æthra, and had afterwards deserted her.

⁴ Castor and Polydeuces are called the "sons of the Swan," in allusion to the fable that Zeus had visited their mother in the form of a swan. They carried Æthra captive to Sparta, where she became a slave of Helen.

⁵ The river which flows by Sparta.

⁶ Helen is here called the "pest of Greece," because she was the cause of the Trojan war.

⁷ Poetic name of Troy.

PART II.

HOW THESEUS SLEW THE DEVOURERS OF MEN.

So Theseus stood there alone, with his mind full of many hopes. And first he thought of going down to the harbor and hiring a swift ship, and sailing across the bay to Athens; but even that seemed too slow for him, and he longed for wings to fly across the sea, and find his father. But after a while his heart began to fail him, and he sighed, and said within himself,—

“What if my father have other sons about him whom he loves? What if he will not receive me? And what have I done that he should receive me? He has forgotten me ever since I was born: why should he welcome me now?”

Then he thought a long while sadly; and at the last he cried aloud, “Yes! I will make him love me; for I will prove myself worthy of his love. I will win honor and renown, and do such deeds that Ægeus shall be proud of me, though he had fifty other sons! Did not Heracles win himself honor though he was opprest, and the slave of Eurystheus¹? Did he not kill all robbers and evil beasts, and drain great lakes and marshes, breaking the hills through with his club? Therefore it was that all men honored him, because he rid them of their miseries, and made life pleasant to them and their children after them. Where can I go, to do as Heracles has done?”

¹ A king of Mycenæ, in whose service Heracles performed his celebrated labors.

Where can I find strange adventures, robbers, and monsters, and the children of hell, the enemies of men? I will go by land, and into the mountains, and round by the way of the Isthmus.¹ Perhaps there I may hear of brave adventures, and do something which shall win my father's love."

So he went by land, and away into the mountains, with his father's sword upon his thigh, till he came to the Spider² Mountains, which hang over Epidaurus and the sea, where the glens run downward from one peak in the midst, as the rays spread in a spider's web.

And he went up into the gloomy glens, between the furrowed marble walls, till the lowland grew blue beneath his feet, and the clouds drove damp about his head.

But he went up and up forever, through the spider's web of glens, till he could see the narrow gulfs spread below him, north and south, and east and west; black cracks half-choked with mists, and above all a dreary down.

But over that down he must go, for there was no road right or left; so he toiled on through bog and brake, till he came to a pile of stones.

And on the stones a man was sitting, wrapt in a bear-skin cloak. The head of the bear served him for a cap, and its teeth grinned white around his brows; and the feet were tied about his throat, and their claws shone white upon his chest. And when he saw Theseus he rose, and laughed till the glens rattled.

"And who art thou, fair fly, who hast walked into the spider's web?" But Theseus walked on steadily, and made no answer; but he thought, "Is this some robber?"

¹ The Isthmus of Corinth.

² Translation of the Greek name Arachnæus.

and has an adventure come already to me?" But the strange man laughed louder than ever, and said, —

"Bold fly, know you not that these glens are the web from which no fly ever finds his way out again, and this down the spider's house, and I the spider who suck the flies? Come hither, and let me feast upon you, for it is of no use to run away, so cunning a web has my father Hephæstus spread for me when he made these clefts in the mountains, through which no man finds his way home."

But Theseus came on steadily, and asked, —

"And what is your name among men, bold spider? and where are your spider's fangs?"

Then the strange man laughed again, —

"My name is Periphetes, the son of Hephæstus and Anticlea the mountain nymph. But men call me Corynetes the club-bearer; and here is my spider's fang."

And he lifted from off the stones at his side a mighty club of bronze.

"This my father gave me, and forged it himself in the roots of the mountain; and with it I pound all proud flies till they give out their fatness and their sweetness. So give me up that gay sword of yours, and your mantle, and your golden sandals, lest I pound you, and by ill luck you die."

But Theseus wrapt his mantle round his left arm quickly in hard folds, from his shoulder to his hand, and drew his sword, and rushed upon the club-bearer, and the club-bearer rushed on him.

Thrice he struck at Theseus, and made him bend under the blows like a sapling; but Theseus guarded his head with his left arm, and the mantle which was wrapt around it.

And thrice Theseus sprang upright after the blow, like a sapling when the storm is past ; and he stabbed at the club-bearer with his sword, but the loose folds of the bear-skin saved him.

Then Theseus grew mad, and closed with him, and caught him by the throat, and they fell and rolled over together ; but when Theseus rose up from the ground, the club-bearer lay still at his feet.

Then Theseus took his club and his bear-skin, and left him to the kites and crows, and went upon his journey down the glens on the further slope, till he came to a broad green valley, and saw flocks and herds sleeping beneath the trees.

And by the side of a pleasant fountain, under the shade of rocks and trees, were nymphs and shepherds dancing ; but no one piped to them while they danced.

And when they saw Theseus they shrieked ; and the shepherds ran off, and drove away their flocks ; while the nymphs dived into the fountain like coots, and vanished.

Theseus wondered and laughed : " What strange fancies have folks here who run away from strangers, and have no music when they dance ! " But he was tired, and dusty, and thirsty ; so he thought no more of them, but drank and bathed in the clear pool, and then lay down in the shade under a plane-tree, while the water sang him to sleep as it tinkled down from stone to stone.

And when he woke he heard a whispering, and saw the nymphs peeping at him across the fountain from the dark mouth of a cave, where they sat on green cushions of moss. And one said, " Surely he is not Periphetes " ; and another, " He looks like no robber, but a fair and gentle youth."

Then Theseus smiled, and called them : " Fair nymphs, I am not Periphetes. He sleeps among the kites and crows : but I have brought away his bear-skin and his club."

Then they leapt across the pool, and came to him, and called the shepherds back. And he told them how he had slain the club-bearer : and the shepherds kissed his feet, and sang, " Now we shall feed our flocks in peace, and not be afraid to have music when we dance ; for the cruel club-bearer has met his match, and he will listen for our pipes no more."

Then they brought him kid's flesh and wine, and the nymphs brought him honey from the rocks ; and he ate, and drank, and slept again, while the nymphs and shepherds danced and sang. And when he woke, they begged him to stay ; but he would not. " I have a great work to do," he said ; " I must be away toward the Isthmus, that I may go to Athens."

But the shepherds said, " Will you go alone toward Athens ? None travel that way now, except in armed troops."

" As for arms, I have enough, as you see. And as for troops, an honest man is good enough company for himself. Why should I not go alone toward Athens ?"

" If you do, you must look warily about you on the Isthmus, lest you meet Sinis the robber, whom men call Pityocamp¹tes the pine-bender¹ ; for he bends down two pine-trees, and binds all travellers hand and foot between them ; and when he lets the trees go again, their bodies are torn in sunder."

" And after that," said another, " you must go inland, and not dare to pass over the cliffs of Sciron ; for on the left hand are the mountains, and on the right the sea, so that you have no escape, but must needs meet Sciron the robber, who will make you wash his feet ; and while you are washing them, he will kick you over the cliff, to the tortoise who lives below, and feeds upon the bodies of the dead."

¹ Translation of the Greek name Pityocamp¹tes.

And before Theseus could answer, another cried, "And after that is a worse danger still, unless you go inland always, and leave Eleusis far on your right. For in Eleusis rules Cercyon the cruel king, the terror of all mortals, who killed his own daughter Alope in prison. But she was changed into a fair fountain ; and her child he cast out upon the mountains, but the wild mares gave it milk. And now he challenges all comers to wrestle with him, for he is the best wrestler in all Attica, and overthrows all who come ; and those whom he overthrows he murders miserably, and his palace-court is full of their bones."

Then Theseus frowned, and said, "This seems indeed an ill-ruled land, and adventures enough in it to be tried. But if I am the heir of it, I will rule it and right it, and here is my royal sceptre." And he shook his club of bronze, while the nymphs and shepherds clung round him, and entreated him not to go.

But on he went, nevertheless, till he could see both the seas, and the citadel of Corinth towering high above all the land. And he past swiftly along the Isthmus, for his heart burned to meet that cruel Sinis ; and in a pine-wood at last he met him, where the Isthmus was narrowest and the road ran between high rocks. There he sat, upon a stone by the wayside, with a young fir-tree for a club across his knees, and a cord laid ready by his side ; and over his head, upon the fir-tops, hung the bones of murdered men.

Then Theseus shouted to him, "Holla, thou valiant pine-bender, hast thou two fir-trees left for me?"

And Sinis leapt to his feet, and answered, pointing to the bones above his head, "My larder has grown empty lately, so I have two fir-trees ready for thee." And he rushed on Theseus, lifting his club, and Theseus rushed upon him.

Then they hammered together till the greenwoods rang: but the metal was tougher than the pine; and Sinis's club broke right across, as the bronze came down upon it. Then Theseus heaved up another mighty stroke, and smote Sinis down upon his face, and knelt upon his back, and bound him with his own cord, and said, "As thou hast done to others, so shall it be done to thee." Then he bent down two young fir-trees, and bound Sinis between them, for all his struggling and his prayers, and let them go, and ended Sinis, and went on, leaving him to the hawks and crows.

Then he went over the hills toward Megara, keeping close along the Saronic Sea, till he came to the cliffs of Sciron, and the narrow path between the mountain and the sea.

And there he saw Sciron sitting by a fountain, at the edge of the cliff. On his knees was a mighty club; and he had barred the path with stones, so that every one must stop who came up.

Then Theseus shouted to him, and said, "Holla, thou tortoise-feeder, do thy feet need washing to-day?"

And Sciron leapt to his feet and answered, —

"My tortoise is empty and hungry, and my feet need washing to-day." And he stood before his barrier, and lifted up his club in both hands.

Then Theseus rushed upon him, and sore was the battle upon the cliff; for when Sciron felt the weight of the bronze club, he dropt his own, and closed with Theseus, and tried to hurl him by main force over the cliff. But Theseus was a wary wrestler, and dropt his own club, and caught him by the throat and by the knee, and forced him back against the wall of stones, and crushed him up against them till his breath was almost gone. And Sciron cried, panting, "Loose me, and I will let thee pass." But Theseus answered, "I must not pass till I have made the rough way smooth"; and he forced him back against the wall till it fell, and Sciron rolled head over heels.

Then Theseus lifted him up all bruised, and said, "Come hither and wash my feet." And he drew his sword, and sat down by the well, and said, "Wash my feet, or I cut you piecemeal."

And Sciron washed his feet trembling; and when it was done, Theseus rose and cried, "As thou hast done to others, so shall it be done to thee. Go feed thy tortoise thyself"; and he kicked him over the cliff into the sea.

And whether the tortoise ate him I know not; for some say that earth and sea both disdained to take his body, so foul it was with sin. So the sea cast it out upon the shore, and the shore cast it back into the sea, and at last the waves hurled it high into the air in anger; and it hung there long without a grave, till it was changed into a desolate rock, which stands there in the surge until this day.

This at least is true, which Pausanias¹ tells, that in the royal porch at Athens he saw the figure of Theseus modelled in clay, and by him Sciron the robber, falling headlong into the sea.

¹ A celebrated traveller and geographer of the second century, A.D., who wrote a minute account of the places and objects of interest which he visited in Greece.

Then he went a long day's journey, past Megara, into the Attic land, and high before him rose the snow-peaks of Cithæron, all cold above the black pine-woods, where haunt the Furies,¹ and the raving Bacchæ,² and the nymphs who drive men wild, far aloft upon the dreary mountains, where the storms howl all day long. And on his right hand was the sea always, and Salamis, with its island cliffs, and the sacred strait of the sea-fight,³ where afterwards the Persians fled before the Greeks. So he went all day until the evening, till he saw the Thriasian plain, and the sacred city of Eleusis, where the Earth-mother's Temple stands. For there she met Triptolemus, when all the land lay waste, Demeter⁴ the kind Earth-mother, and in her hands a sheaf of corn. And she taught him to plough the fallows, and to yoke the lazy kine; and she taught him to sow the seed-fields, and to reap the golden grain; and sent him forth to teach all nations, and give corn to laboring men. So at Eleusis all men honor her, whosoever tills the land; her and Triptolemus her beloved, who gave corn to laboring men.

And he went along the plain into Eleusis, and stood in the market-place, and cried, —

"Where is Cercyon the king of the city? I must wrestle a fall with him to-day."

Then all the people crowded round him, and cried, "Fair youth, why will you die? Hasten out of the city before the cruel king hears that a stranger is here."

But Theseus went up through the town, while the peo-

¹ Same as the Erinyes; see foot-note, p. 71.

² Female devotees of Bacchus (Dionysus).

³ The naval battle of Salamis, in which the Greeks defeated the fleet of the Persian king Xerxes, occurred in 480 B.C.

⁴ See the "Descriptive Table of Greek Divinities," p. vi.

ple wept and prayed, and through the gates of the palace yard, and through the piles of bones and skulls, till he came to the door of Cercyon's hall, the terror of all mortal men.

And there he saw Cercyon sitting at the table in the hall alone ; and before him was a whole sheep roasted, and beside him a whole jar of wine. And Theseus stood and called him, "Holla, thou valiant wrestler, wilt thou wrestle a fall to-day?"

And Cercyon looked up and laughed, and answered, "I will wrestle a fall to-day ; but come in, for I am lonely and thou weary, and eat and drink before thou die."

Then Theseus went up boldly, and sat down before Cercyon at the board, and he ate his fill of the sheep's flesh, and drank his fill of the wine ; and Theseus ate enough for three men, but Cercyon ate enough for seven.

But neither spoke a word to the other, though they looked across the table by stealth ; and each said in his heart, "He has broad shoulders, but I trust mine are as broad as his."

At last, when the sheep was eaten, and the jar of wine drained dry, King Cercyon rose, and cried, "Let us wrestle a fall before we sleep."

So they tossed off all their garments, and went forth into the palace-yard, and Cercyon bade strew fresh sand in an open space between the bones. And there the heroes stood face to face, while their eyes glared like wild bulls' ; and all the people crowded at the gates to see what would befall.

And there they stood and wrestled till the stars shone out above their heads ; up and down and round, till the sand was stamped hard beneath their feet. And their eyes flashed like stars in the darkness, and their breath went up like smoke in the night air ; but neither took nor gave a footstep, and the people watched silent at the gates.

But at last Cercyon grew angry and caught Theseus round the neck, and shook him as a mastiff shakes a rat, but he could not shake him off his feet.

But Theseus was quick and wary, and clasped Cercyon round the waist, and slipped his loin quickly underneath him, while he caught him by the wrist ; and then he hove a mighty heave, a heave which would have stirred an oak, and lifted Cercyon, and pitched him right over his shoulder on the ground.

Then he leapt on him, and called, "Yield, or I kill thee !" but Cercyon said no word, for his heart was burst within him, with the fall, and the meat, and the wine.

Then Theseus opened the gates, and called in all the people ; and they cried, "You have slain our evil king ; be you now our king, and rule us well."

"I will be your king in Eleusis, and I will rule you right and well ; for this cause I have slain all evil-doers, Sinis, and Sciron, and this man last of all."

Then an aged man stepped forth, and said, "Young hero, hast thou slain Sinis ? Beware then of Ægeus, king of Athens, to whom thou goest, for he is near of kin to Sinis."

"Then I have slain my own kinsman," said Theseus, "though well he deserved to die. Who will purge me from his death, for rightfully I slew him, unrighteous and as he was ?"

And the old man answered, —

"That will the heroes do, the sons of Phytalus,¹ who dwell beneath the elm-tree in Aphidnæ, by the bank of silver Cephisus, for they know the mysteries of the gods. Thither you shall go and be purified, and after you shall be our king."

¹ An Eleusinian hero who had been honored by Demeter for having kindly received the goddess in her wanderings.

So he took an oath of the people of Eleusis, that they would serve him as their king, and went away next morning across the Thriasian plain, and over the hills toward Aphidnæ, that he might find the sons of Phytalus.

And as he was skirting the Vale of Cephisus, along the foot of lofty Parnes, a very tall and strong man came down to meet him, dressed in rich garments. On his arms were golden bracelets, and round his neck a collar of jewels; and he came forward, bowing courteously, and held out both his hands, and spoke, —

"Welcome, fair youth, to these mountains; happy am I to have met you! For what greater pleasure to a good man than to entertain strangers? But I see that you are weary. Come up to my castle, and rest yourself awhile."

"I give you thanks," said Theseus; "but I am in haste to go up the valley, and to reach Aphidnæ, in the Vale of Cephisus."

"Alas! you have wandered far from the right way, and you cannot reach Aphidnæ to-night; for there are many miles of mountain between you and it, and steep passes, and cliffs dangerous after nightfall. It is well for you that I met you; for my whole joy is to find strangers, and to feast them at my castle, and hear tales from them of foreign lands. Come up with me, and eat the best of venison, and drink the rich red wine; and sleep upon my famous bed, of which all travellers say that they never saw the like. For whatsoever the stature of my guest, however tall or short, that bed fits him to a hair, and he sleeps on it as he never slept before." And he laid hold on Theseus's hands, and would not let him go.

Theseus wished to go forwards, but he was ashamed to seem churlish to so hospitable a man ; and he was curious to see that wondrous bed ; and, beside, he was hungry and weary ; yet he shrank from the man, he knew not why ; for though his voice was gentle and fawning, it was dry and husky like a toad's ; and though his eyes were gentle, they were dull and cold like stones. But he consented, and went with the man up a glen which led from the road toward the peaks of Parnes, under the dark shadow of the cliffs.

And as they went up, the glen grew narrower, and the cliffs higher and darker, and beneath them a torrent roared, half-seen between bare limestone crags. And around them was neither tree nor bush, while from the white peaks of Parnes the snow-blasts swept down the glen, cutting and chilling, till a horror fell on Theseus, as he looked round at that doleful place. And he asked at last, "Your castle stands, it seems, in a dreary region."

"Yes, but once within it, hospitality makes all things cheerful. But who are these?" and he looked back, and Theseus also ; and far below, along the road which they had left, came a string of laden asses, and merchants walking by them, watching their ware.

"Ah, poor souls!" said the stranger ; "well for them that I looked back and saw them ! And well for me, too, for I shall have the more guests at my feast. Wait awhile till I go down and call them, and we will eat and drink together the livelong night. Happy am I, to whom Heaven sends so many guests at once !"

And he ran back down the hill, waving his hand and shouting to the merchants, while Theseus went slowly up the steep path.

But as he went up he met an aged man, who had been gathering drift-wood in the torrent-bed. He had laid down his fagot in the road, and was trying to lift it again to his shoulder. And when he saw Theseus, he called to him, and said, —

“O fair youth, help me up with my burden; for my limbs are stiff and weak with years.”

Then Theseus lifted the burden on his back. And the old man blest him, and then looked earnestly upon him, and said, —

“Who are you, fair youth, and wherefore travel you this doleful road?”

“Who I am my parents know: but I travel this doleful road because I have been invited by a hospitable man, who promises to feast me, and to make me sleep upon I know not what wondrous bed.”

Then the old man clapped his hands together, and cried, —

“O house of Hades, man-devouring! will thy maw never be full? Know, fair youth, that you are going to torment and to death; for he who met you (I will requite your kindness by another) is a robber and a murderer of men. Whatsoever stranger he meets he entices him hither to death; and as for this bed of which he speaks, truly it fits all comers, yet none ever rose alive off it save me.”

“Why?” asked Theseus, astonished.

“Because, if a man be too tall for it, he lops his limbs till they be short enough, and if he be too short, he stretches his limbs till they be long enough: but me only he spared, seven weary years ago; for I alone of all fitted his bed exactly; so he spared me, and made me his slave. And once I was a wealthy merchant, and dwelt in brazen-gated Thebes; but now I hew wood and draw water for him, the torment of all mortal men.”

Then Theseus said nothing, but he ground his teeth together.

"Escape then," said the old man, "for he will have no pity on thy youth. But yesterday he brought up hither a young man and a maiden, and fitted them upon his bed : and the young man's hands and feet he cut off ; but the maiden's limbs he stretched until she died, and so both perished miserably—but I am tired of weeping over the slain. And therefore he is called Procrustes the stretcher,¹ though his father called him Damastes. Flee from him : yet whither will you flee ? The cliffs are steep, and who can climb them ? and there is no other road."

But Theseus laid his hand upon the old man's mouth, and said, "There is no need to flee" ; and he turned to go down the pass.

"Do not tell him that I have warned you, or he will kill me by some evil death" ; and the old man screamed after him down the glen, but Theseus strode on in his wrath.

And he said to himself, "This is an ill-ruled land ; when shall I have done ridding it of monsters ?" And as he spoke, Procrustes came up the hill, and all the merchants with him, smiling and talking gayly. And when he saw Theseus, he cried, "Ah, fair young guest, have I kept you too long waiting ?"

But Theseus answered, "The man who stretches his guests upon a bed, and hews off their hands and feet, what shall be done to him, when right is done throughout the land ?"

Then Procrustes's countenance changed, and his cheeks grew as green as a lizard, and he felt for his sword in haste ; but Theseus leapt on him, and cried, —

¹ Translation of the Greek name Procrustes.

"Is this true, my host, or is it false?" and he clasped Procrustes round waist and elbow, so that he could not draw his sword.

"Is this true, my host, or is it false?" But Procrustes answered never a word.

Then Theseus flung him from him, and lifted up his dreadful club; and, before Procrustes could strike him, he had struck, and felled him to the ground.

And once again he struck him; and his evil soul fled forth, and went down to Hades squeaking, like a bat into the darkness of a cave.

Then Theseus stript him of his gold ornaments, and went up to his house, and found there great wealth and treasure, which he had stolen from the passers by. And he called the people of the country, whom Procrustes had spoiled a long time, and parted the spoil among them, and went down the mountains, and away.

And he went down the glens of Parnes, through mist, and cloud, and rain, down the slopes of oak, and lentisk, and arbutus, and fragrant bay, till he came to the Vale of Cephissus, and the pleasant town of Aphidnæ, and the home of the Phytalid¹ heroes, where they dwelt beneath a mighty elm.

And there they built an altar, and bade him bathe in Cephissus, and offer a yearling ram, and purified him from the blood of Sinis, and sent him away in peace.

And he went down the valley by Acharnæ, and by the silver-swirling stream, while all the people blessed him; for the fame of his prowess had spread wide, till he saw the plain of Athens, and the hill where Athene dwells.

So Theseus went up through Athens, and all the people ran out to see him; for his fame had gone before him, and every one knew of his mighty deeds. And all cried, "Here comes the hero, who slew Sinis, and Phæa the wild sow of Crommyon, and conquered Cercyon in wrestling, and slew Procrustes the pitiless. But Theseus went on sadly and steadfastly, for his heart yearned after his father; and he said, "How shall I deliver him from these leeches who suck his blood?"

¹ The word signifies descended from Phytalus.

So he went up the holy stairs, and into the Acropolis,¹ where Ægeus's palace stood; and he went straight into Ægeus's hall, and stood upon the threshold, and looked round.

And there he saw his cousins sitting about the table, at the wine; many a son of Pallas,² but no Ægeus among them. There they sat and feasted, and laughed, and passed the wine-cup round; while harpers harped, and slave girls sang, and the tumblers showed their tricks.

Loud laughed the sons of Pallas, and fast went the wine-cup round; but Theseus frowned, and said under his breath, "No wonder that the land is full of robbers, while such as these bear rule."

Then the Pallantids³ saw him, and called to him, half-drunk with wine, "Holla, tall stranger at the door, what is your will to-day?"

"I come hither to ask for hospitality."

"Then take it, and welcome. You look like a hero and a bold warrior, and we like such to drink with us."

"I ask no hospitality of you; I ask it of Ægeus the king, the master of this house."

¹ The citadel of Athens. It is a steep, rocky hill, rising about 160 feet above the surrounding plain, and having a flat top 1,150 feet long and nearly 500 feet broad. On the acropolis stood the Parthenon, or Temple of Athene, the ruins of which still excite the admiration of travellers.

² A brother of Ægeus.

³ The name signifies the sons of Pallas.

At that some growled, and some laughed, and shouted, "Heyday, we are all masters here."

"Then I am master as much as the rest of you," said Theseus; and he strode past the table up the hall, and looked around for Ægeus, but he was nowhere to be seen.

The Pallantids looked at him, and then at each other, and each whispered to the man next him, "This is a forward fellow; he ought to be thrust out at the door." But each man's neighbor whispered in return, "His shoulders are broad; will you rise and put him out?" So they all sat still where they were.

Then Theseus called to the servants, and said, "Go tell King Ægeus, your master, that Theseus of Trœzene is here, and asks to be his guest awhile."

A servant ran and told Ægeus, where he sat in his chamber within, by Medea the dark witch-woman, watching her eye and hand. And when Ægeus heard of Trœzene, he turned pale and red again, and rose from his seat trembling, while Medea watched him like a snake.

"What is Trœzene to you?" she asked. But he said hastily, "Do you not know who this Theseus is? The hero who has cleared the country from all monsters; but that he came from Trœzene, I never heard before. I must go out and welcome him."

So Ægeus came out into the hall; and when Theseus saw him, his heart leapt into his mouth, and he longed to fall on his neck and welcome him; but he controlled himself, and said, "My father may not wish for me, after all. I will try him before I discover myself;" and he bowed low before Ægeus, and said, "I have delivered the king's realm from many monsters; therefore I am come to ask a reward of the king."

And old Ægeus looked on him, and loved him, — as what fond heart would not have done? But he only sighed, and said, —

“It is little that I can give you, noble lad, and nothing that is worthy of you ; for surely you are no mortal man, or at least no mortal’s son.”

“All that I ask,” said Theseus, “is to eat and drink at your table.”

“That I can give you,” said Ægeus, “if at least I am master in my own hall.”

Then he bade them put a seat for Theseus, and set before him the best of the feast ; and Theseus sat and ate so much that all the company wondered at him ; but always he kept his club by his side.

But Medea, the dark witch-woman, had been watching him all the while. She saw how Ægeus turned red and pale when the lad said that he came from Trœzene. She saw, too, how his heart was opened toward Theseus ; and how Theseus bore himself before all the sons of Pallas like a lion among a pack of curs. And she said to herself : “This youth will be master here ; perhaps he is nearer to Ægeus already than mere fancy. At least the Pallantids will have no chance by the side of such as he.”

Then she went back into her chamber, modestly, while Theseus ate and drank ; and all the servants whispered : “This, then, is the man who killed the monsters ! How noble are his looks, and how huge his size ! Ah, would that he were our master’s son !”

But presently Medea came forth, decked in all her jewels and her rich Eastern robes, and looking more beautiful than the day ; so that all the guests could look at nothing else. And in her right hand she held a golden cup, and in her left a flask of gold ; and she came up to Theseus, and spoke in a sweet, soft, winning voice, —

"Hail to the hero, the conqueror, the unconquered, the destroyer of all evil things! Drink, hero, of my charmed cup, which gives rest after every toil, which heals all wounds, and pours new life into the veins. Drink of my cup; for in it sparkles the wine of the East, and Nepenthe, the comfort of the Immortals."

And as she spoke, she poured the flask into the cup; and the fragrance of the wine spread through the hall, like the scent of thyme and roses.

And Theseus looked up in her fair face, and into her deep dark eyes. And as he looked, he shrank and shuddered; for they were dry, like the eyes of a snake. And he rose, and said, "The wine is rich and fragrant, and the wine-bearer as fair as the Immortals; but let her pledge me first herself in the cup, that the wine may be the sweeter from her lips."

Then Medea turned pale, and stammered, "Forgive me, fair hero; but I am ill, and dare drink no wine."

And Theseus looked again into her eyes, and cried, "Thou shalt pledge me in that cup, or die." And he lifted up his brazen club, while all the guests looked on aghast.

Medea shrieked a fearful shriek, and dashed the cup to the ground, and fled; and where the wine flowed over the marble pavement the stone bubbled, and crumbled, and hissed, under the fierce venom of the draught.

But Medea called her dragon chariot, and sprang into it and fled aloft, away over land and sea; and no man saw her more.

And Ægeus cried, "What hast thou done?" But Theseus pointed to the stone,—"I have rid the land of an enchantment: now I will rid it of one more."

And he came close to Ægeus, and drew from his bosom the sword and the sandals, and said the words which his mother bade him.

And Ægeus stepped back a pace, and looked at the lad till his eyes grew dim ; and then he cast himself on his neck, and wept ; and Theseus wept on his neck, till they had no strength left to weep more.

Then Ægeus turned to all the people, and cried, " Behold my son, children of Cecrops, — a better man than his father was before him."

Who then were mad but the Pallantids, though they had been mad enough before ? And one shouted, " Shall we make room for an upstart, a pretender, who comes from we know not where ?" And another, " If he be one, we are more than one ; and the stronger can hold his own." And one shouted one thing, and one another, for they were hot and wild with wine ; but all caught swords and lances off the wall, where the weapons hung around, and sprang forward to Theseus ; and Theseus sprang forward to them.

And he cried, " Go in peace, if you will, my cousins ; but if not, your blood be on your own heads." But they rushed at him ; and then stopped short, and railed him, as curs stop and bark when they rouse a lion from his lair.

But one hurled a lance from the rear rank, which past close by Theseus's head ; and at that Theseus rushed forward, and the fight began indeed. Twenty against one they fought, and yet Theseus beat them all ; and those who were left fled down into the town, where the people set on them and drove them out, till Theseus was left alone in the palace with Ægeus, his new-found father. But before nightfall all the town came up, with victims, and dances, and songs ; and they offered sacrifices to Athene, and rejoiced all the night long, because their king had found a noble son, and an heir to his royal house.

So Theseus stayed with his father all the winter ; and when the spring equinox drew near, all the Athenians grew sad and silent ; and Theseus saw it, and asked the reason, but no one would answer him a word.

Then he went to his father, and asked him ; but Ægeus turned away his face and wept.

“Do not ask, my son, beforehand, about evils which must happen ; it is enough to have to face them when they come.”

And when the spring equinox came, a herald came to Athens, and stood in the market, and cried, “O people and King of Athens, where is your yearly tribute ?” Then a great lamentation arose throughout the city. But Theseus stood up to the herald, and cried, —

“And who are you, dog-faced, who dare demand tribute here ? If I did not reverence your herald’s staff, I would brain you with this club.”

And the herald answered proudly, for he was a grave and ancient man, —

“Fair youth, I am not dog-faced or shameless ; but I do my master’s bidding, Minos the King of hundred-citied Crete, the wisest of all kings on earth. And you must be surely a stranger here, or you would know why I come, and that I come by right.”

“I am a stranger here. Tell me, then, why you come.”

“To fetch the tribute which King Ægeus promised to Minos, and confirmed his promise with an oath. For Minos conquered all this land, and Megara which lies to the east, when he came hither with a great fleet of ships, enraged about the murder of his son. For his son Andro-geos came hither to the Panathenaic¹ games, and overcame all the Greeks in the sports, so that the people honored him as a hero. But when Ægeus saw his valor, he envied him, and feared lest he should join the sons of Pallas, and take away the sceptre from him. So he plotted against his life, and slew him basely, no man knows how or where. Some say that he waylaid him by CEnoe, on the road which goes to Thebes ; and some that he sent him against the bull of Marathon, that the beast might kill him. But Ægeus says that the young men killed him from envy, because he had conquered them in the games. So Minos came hither and avenged him, and would not depart till this land had promised him tribute, —seven youths and seven maidens every year, who go with me in a black-sailed ship till they come to hundred-citied Crete."

And Theseus ground his teeth together, and said, "Wert thou not a herald I would kill thee, for saying such things of my father : but I will go to him, and know the truth." So he went to his father, and asked him ; but he turned away his head and wept, and said : "Blood was shed in the land unjustly, and by blood it is avenged. Break not my heart by questions ; it is enough to endure in silence."

Then Theseus groaned inwardly, and said, "I will go myself with these youths and maidens, and kill Minos upon his royal throne."

But Ægeus shrieked, and cried : "You shall not go, my son, the light of my old age, to whom alone I look to rule this people after I am dead and gone. You shall not go, to die horribly, as those youths and maidens die ; for Minos thrusts them into a labyrinth which Dædalus made for him among the rocks, — Dædalus the renegade, the accursed, the pest of this his native land. From that labyrinth no one can escape, entangled in its winding ways, before they meet the Minotaur,¹ the monster who feeds upon the flesh of men. There he devours them horribly, and they never see this land again."

¹ The Panathenaic festival was celebrated once in four years at Athens in honor of Athene, as protectress of the city, and was participated in by the combined population of Attica.

Then Theseus grew red, and his ears tingled, and his heart beat loud in his bosom. And he stood awhile like a tall stone pillar on the cliffs above some hero's grave; and at last he spoke, —

"Therefore all the more I will go with them, and slay the accursed beast. Have I not slain all evil-doers and monsters, that I might free this land? Where are Periphetes, and Sinis, and Cercyon, and Phæa the wild sow? Where are the fifty sons of Pallas? And this Minotaur shall go on the road which they have gone; and Minos himself, if he dare stay me."

"But how will you slay him, my son? For you must leave your club and your armor behind, and be cast to the monster defenceless and naked like the rest."

And Theseus said: "Are there no stones in that labyrinth? and have I not fists and teeth? Did I need my club to kill Cercyon, the terror of all mortal men?"

Then Ægeus clung to his knees, but he would not hear: and at last he let him go, weeping bitterly, and said only this one word, —

"Promise me but this, if you return in peace, though that may hardly be: take down the black sail of the ship (for I shall watch for it all day upon the cliffs) and hoist instead a white sail, that I may know afar off that you are safe."

¹ A monster, half man and half bull.

And Theseus promised, and went out, and to the market-place where the herald stood while they drew lots for the youths and maidens who were to sail in that doleful crew. And the people stood wailing and weeping, as the lot fell on this one and on that ; but Theseus strode into the midst, and cried, —

“ Here is a youth who needs no lot. I myself will be one of the seven.”

And the herald asked in wonder, “ Fair youth, know you whither you are going ? ”

And Theseus said : “ I know. Let us go down to the black-sailed ship.”

So they went down to the black-sailed ship, — seven maidens, and seven youths, and Theseus before them all, and the people following them lamenting. But Theseus whispered to his companions : “ Have hope, for the monster is not immortal. Where are Periphetes, and Sinis, and Sciron, and all whom I have slain ? ” Then their hearts were comforted a little : but they wept as they went on board ; and the cliffs of Sunium rang, and all the isles of the Ægean Sea, with the voice of their lamentation, as they sailed on toward their deaths in Crete.

PART III.

HOW THESEUS SLEW THE MINOTAUR.

AND at last they came to Crete, and to Cnosus, beneath the peaks of Ida, and to the palace of Minos, the great king to whom Zeus himself taught laws. So he was the wisest of all mortal kings, and conquered all the Ægean isles ; and his ships were as many as the sea-gulls, and his palace like a marble hill. And he sat among the pillars of the hall, upon his throne of beaten gold, and around him stood the speaking statues which Dædalus had made by his skill. For Dædalus was the most cunning of all Athenians, and he first invented the plumb-line, and the auger, and glue, and many a tool with which wood is wrought. And he first set up masts in ships, and yards, and his son made sails for them. But Perdix, his nephew, excelled him ; for he first invented the saw and its teeth, copying it from the backbone of a fish ; and invented, too, the chisel, and the compasses, and the potter's wheel which moulds the clay. Therefore Dædalus envied him, and hurled him headlong from the temple of Athene ; but the Goddess pitied him, — for she loves the wise, — and changed him into a partridge, which flits forever about the hills. And Dædalus fled to Crete, to Minos, and worked for him many a year, till he did a shameful deed, at which the sun hid his face on high.

Then he fled from the anger of Minos, — he and Icarus, his son, having made themselves wings of feathers, and fixed the feathers with wax. So they flew over the sea toward Sicily ; but Icarus flew too near the sun, and the wax of his wings was melted, and he fell into the Icarian Sea. But Dædalus came safe to Sicily, and there wrought many a wondrous work : for he made for King Cocalus a reservoir from which a great river watered all the land, and a castle and a treasury on a mountain, which the giants themselves could not have stormed ; and in Selinus he took the steam which comes up from the fires of Ætna and made of it a warm bath of vapor, to cure the pains of mortal men ; and he made a honeycomb of gold, in which the bees came and stored their honey ; and in Egypt he made the fore-court of the temple of Hephæstus, in Memphis, and a statue of himself within it, and many another wondrous work. And for Minos he made statues which spoke and moved, and the temple of Britomartis,¹ and the dancing-hall of Ariadne, which he carved of fair white stone. And in Sardinia he worked for Iolaus² ; and in many a land beside, wandering up and down forever with his cunning, unlovely and accursed by men.

But Theseus stood before Minos, and they looked each other in the face. And Minos bade take them to prison, and cast them to the monster one by one, that the death of Androgeos might be avenged. Then Theseus cried, —

“A boon, O Minos. Let me be thrown first to the beast. For I came hither for that very purpose, of my own will, and not by lot.”

“Who art thou, then, brave youth?”

“I am the son of him whom of all men thou hatest most, Ægeus the king of Athens, and I am come here to end this matter.”

¹ A Cretan divinity of hunters and fishermen, afterwards identified with Artemis (Lat. Diana).

² Nephew and faithful attendant of Heracles.

And Minos pondered awhile, looking steadfastly at him, and he thought, "The lad means to atone by his own death for his father's sin"; and he answered at last mildly, —

"Go back in peace, my son. It is a pity that one so brave should die."

But Theseus said, "I have sworn that I will not go back till I have seen the monster face to face."

And at that Minos frowned, and said, "Then thou shalt see him; take the madman away."

And they led Theseus away into the prison, with the other youths and maids.

But Ariadne, Minos's daughter, saw him, as she came out of her white stone hall; and she loved him for his courage and his majesty, and said, "Shame that such a youth should die!" And by night she went down to the prison, and told him all her heart; and said, —

"Flee down to your ship at once, for I have bribed the guards before the door. Flee, you and all your friends, and go back in peace to Greece; and take me, take me with you! for I dare not stay after you are gone; for my father will kill me miserably, if he knows what I have done."

And Theseus stood silent awhile; for he was astonished and confounded by her beauty: but at last he said, "I cannot go home in peace, till I have seen and slain this Minotaur, and avenged the deaths of the youths and maidens, and put an end to the terrors of my land."

"And will you kill the Minotaur? How, then?"

"I know not, nor do I care: but he must be strong if he be too strong for me."

Then she loved him all the more, and said, "But when you have killed him, how will you find your way out of the labyrinth?"

"I know not, neither do I care : but it must be a strange road, if I do not find it out before I have eaten up the monster's carcase."

Then she loved him all the more, and said, —

"Fair youth, you are too bold ; but I can help you, weak as I am. I will give you a sword, and with that, perhaps, you may slay the beast ; and a clue of thread, and by that, perhaps, you may find your way out again. Only promise me, that if you escape safe, you will take me home with you to Greece ; for my father will surely kill me, if he knows what I have done."

Then Theseus laughed, and said, "Am I not safe enough now?" And he hid the sword in his bosom, and rolled up the clue in his hand ; and then he swore to Ariadne, and fell down before her, and kissed her hands and her feet ; and she wept over him a long while, and then went away ; and Theseus lay down and slept sweetly.

And when the evening came, the guards came in and led him away to the labyrinth.

And he went down into that doleful gulf, through winding paths among the rocks, under caverns, and arches, and galleries, and over heaps of fallen stone. And he turned on the left hand, and on the right hand, and went up and down, till his head was dizzy ; but all the while he held his clue. For when he went in he had fastened it to a stone, and left it to unroll out of his hand as he went on ; and it lasted him till he met the Minotaur, in a narrow chasm between black cliffs.

And when he saw him he stopped awhile, for he never seen so strange a beast. His body was a man, but his head was the head of a bull ; and his teeth were the teeth of a lion ; and with them he tore his prey. And when he saw Theseus he roared, and put his head down and rushed right at him.

GREEK HEROES.— PAGE 159.

But Theseus stepped aside nimbly, and as he passed by, cut him in the knee; and ere he could turn in the narrow path, he followed him, and stabbed him again and again from behind, till the monster fled bellowing wildly; for he had never before felt a wound. And Theseus followed him at full speed, holding the clue of thread in his left hand.

Then on, through cavern after cavern, under dark ribs of sounding stone, and up rough glens and torrent-beds, among the sunless roots of Ida, and to the edge of the eternal snow, went they, the hunter and the hunted, while the hills bellowed to the monster's bellow.

And at last Theseus came up with him, where he lay panting on a slab among the snow, and caught him by the horns, and forced his head back, and drove the keen sword through his throat.

Then he turned, and went back limping and weary, feeling his way down by the clue of thread, till he came to the mouth of that doleful place; and saw waiting for him, whom but Ariadne!

And he whispered, "It is done!" and showed her the sword; and she laid her finger on her lips, and led him to the prison, and opened the doors, and set all the prisoners free, while the guards lay sleeping heavily; for she had silenced them with wine.

Then they fled to their ship together, and leapt on board, and hoisted up the sail; and the night lay dark around them, so that they past through Minos's ships, and escaped all safe to Naxos; and there Ariadne became Theseus's wife.

PART IV.

HOW THESEUS FELL BY HIS PRIDE.

BUT that fair Ariadne never came to Athens with her husband. Some say that Theseus left her sleeping on Naxos among the Cyclades ; and that Dionysus¹ the wine-king found her, and took her up into the sky, as you shall see some day in a painting of old Titian's,² one of the most glorious pictures upon earth. And some say that Dionysus drove away Theseus, and took Ariadne from him by force : but however that may be, in his haste or in his grief Theseus forgot to put up the white sail. Now Ægeus his father sat and watched on Sunium day after day, and strained his old eyes across the sea, to see the ship afar. And when he saw the black sail, and not the white one, he gave up Theseus for dead, and in his grief he fell into the sea, and died ; so it is called the Ægean to this day.

And now Theseus was king of Athens, and he guarded it and ruled it well.

For he killed the bull of Marathon, which had killed Androgeos, Minos's son ; and he drove back the famous Amazons, the warlike women of the East, when they came from Asia, and conquered all Hellas, and broke into Athens itself. But Theseus stopped them there, and conquered them, and took Hippolyte their queen to be his wife. Then he went out to fight against the Lapithæ,¹ and Peirithous their famous king: but when the two heroes came face to face they loved each other, and embraced, and became noble friends; so that the friendship of Theseus and Peirithous is a proverb even now. And he gathered (so the Athenians say) all the boroughs of the land together, and knit them into one strong people, while before they were all parted and weak: and many another wise thing he did, so that his people honored him after he was dead, for many a hundred years, as the father of their freedom and their laws. And six hundred years after his death, in the famous fight at Marathon,² men said that they saw the ghost of Theseus, with his mighty brazen club, fighting in the van of battle against the invading Persians, for the country which he loved. And twenty years after Marathon, his bones (they say) were found in Scyros, an isle beyond the sea; and they were bigger than the bones of mortal man. So the Athenians brought them home in triumph; and all the people came out to welcome them; and they built over them a noble temple, and adorned it with sculptures and paintings, in which were told all the noble deeds of Theseus, and the Centaurs, and the Lapithæ, and the Amazons; and the ruins of it are standing still.

¹ See "Descriptive Table of Greek Divinities," p. vi.

² The celebrated Venetian painter ; the picture here referred to was painted in 1514 for Alfonso I., Duke of Ferrara.

But why did they find his bones in Scyros? Why did he not die in peace at Athens, and sleep by his father's side? Because, after his triumph he grew proud, and broke the laws of God and man. And one thing worst of all he did, which brought him to his grave with sorrow. For he went down (they say beneath the earth) with that bold Peirithous his friend, to help him to carry off Persephone,¹ the queen of the world below. But Peirithous was killed miserably, in the dark fire-kingdoms underground; and Theseus was chained to a rock in everlasting pain. And there he sat for years, till Heracles the mighty came down to bring up the three-headed dog who sits at Pluto's gate. So Heracles loosed him from his chain, and brought him up to the light once more.

¹ A mountain tribe of Thessaly.

² B.C. 490.

But when he came back his people had forgotten him, and Castor and Polydeuces, the sons of the wondrous Swan,² had invaded his land, and carried off his mother Æthra for a slave, in revenge for a grievous wrong.

So the fair land of Athens was wasted, and another king ruled in it, who drove out Theseus shamefully, and he fled across the sea to Scyros. And there he lived in sadness, in the house of Lycomedes the king, till Lycomedes killed him by treachery, and there was an end of all his labors.

So it is still, my children, and so it will be to the end. In those old Greeks, and in us also, all strength and virtue come from God. But if men grow proud and self-willed, and misuse God's fair gifts, He lets them go their own ways, and fall pitifully, that the glory may be His alone. God help us all, and give us wisdom, and courage to do noble deeds! but God keep pride from us when we have done them, lest we fall, and come to shame!

¹ Daughter of Demeter, and wife of Pluto.

² See foot-note 4, p. 129.

INDEX.

PRONOUNCING INDEX OF GREEK PROPER NAMES.

NOTE.—In the English pronunciation of the following names, observe these rules: (1) c before e, i, y, æ, œ = s; (2) g before e, i, y, æ, œ = j; (3) ch = k; (4) œ and œ = e.

Ab-syr'tus	Am-al-the'a	At'ti-ca	Ce-phi'sus
A-by'dos	Am-phi-tri'te	Au-so'ni-a	Cer'cy-on
Ab'y-la	Am'y-cus	Bac'chæ	(-shk-on)
A-char'næ	A-nau'rus	Bel-ler'o-phon	Ce'yx
Ach-e-lo'us	An-dro'ge-os	Bi-thyn'i-a	Chal-ci'o-pe
A-chil'les	An-drom'e-da	Bœ'be	Chal'y-bes
A-cri'si-us	An-the-mu'sa	Bœ-o'ti-a	Cha-ryb'dis
(A-cr'i'sht-us)	An-ti-cle'a	(-shk-a)	Che'ron
Æ-æ'a	Aph'e-tæ	Bos'pho-rus	Chem'mis
Æ-an'tes	A-phid'næ	Bri'mo	Cher-so-nese'
Æ'as	Aph-ro-di'te	Brit-o-mar'tis	Chi-mæ'ra
Æ-e'tes	Ar-ach-næ'us	Bu'tes	Ci'con
Æ'geus	A'res	Cæ'neus	Cim-me'ri-an
Æ-gi'na	A-re'te	Cal'a-is	Cir'ce
Æ-ne'as	Ar-gan'thus	Cal-li'o-pe	Ci-thæ'ron
Æ'o-lus	Ar'givø	Cal'pe	Cle-o-pa'tra
Æ-ol'id	Ar'gus	Cal'y-don	Cno'sus ¹
Æ'son	A-ri-ad'ne	Can'thus	Coc'a-lus
Æ-thal'i-des	Ar-i-mas'pi	Ca'si-us	Col'chi
Æ'thi-op	As-cle'pi-us	(-shk-us)	Col'chis
Æ'thra	As-syr'i-a	Cas-si-o-pe'a	Co-pa'ic
Æ't'na	A-tar'ga-tis	Cas-si-ter'i-des	Cor-cy'ra
A'jax	Ath'a-mas	Cau'ca-sus	Cor-y-ne'tes
Al-cin'o-us	A-the'ne	Ce'os	Crom'my-on
Al'o-pe	A'thos	Ce'pheus	Cro'ni-an

¹ Initial c before a consonant is silent; therefore pronounce, No'sus.

Cyc'la-des	Hel'le	Li-bur'ni-a	Pan-da're-os
Cy-clo'pes	Hel-le'nes	Lib'y-a	Pan-di'on
Cyr-e-na'i-ca	Hel'les-pont	Lil-y-bæ'um	Par'nes
Cy-re'ne	He-phæ's'tus	Lo'cri	Pau-sa'ni-as
Cy-tæ'a	He'ra	Lyc-o-me'des	Pei-rith'o-us
Cyth'nus	Her'a-cles	Ly'cus	Pe-las'gi
Cyz'i-cus	Her'mes	Lyn'ceus	Pe'leus
Dæd'a-lus	Her-mi'o-ne	Mæ-ot'id	Pe'li-as
Da-mas'tes	Hes-per'i-des	Ma'le-a	Pe'li-on
Dan'a-e	Hes'pe-rus	Mar'a-thon	Pel-o-pon-nese'
Del'phi	Hip-pol'y-te	Me-de'a	Pel-o-pon-ne'sus
De-me'ter	Hyd're-a	Me-du'sa	Pe-nel'o-pe
Deu-ca'li-on	Hy'las	Meg'a-ra	Pe-ne'us
Dic'tys	Hy-met'tus	Me-læ'na	Pen-tel'i-cus
Di-o-ny'sus	Hy-per-bo're-an	Me-le-a'ger	Per'dix
Di-os-cu'ri	Hy-per-bo're-i	Me-tha'na	Per-i-phe'tes
E-chid'na	I-be'ri-a	Mi'nos	Per-seph'o-ne
E-chin'a-des	I-ca'ri-an	Min'o-taur	Per'seus
E-leu'sis	Ic'a-rus	Min'y-ae	Phæ'a
En-cel'a-dus	I'da	Min'y-an	Phæ-a'ces
E'os	I-da'li-an	Mop'sus	Pha'si-an
Ep-i-dau'rus	I'das	My-ce'næ	(-zhi'an)
E-rin'y-es	Id'mon	Mys'i-an	Pha'sis
Eu-bœ'a	I-er'ne	(-zhi'an)	Phi'neus
Eu-phor'bus	Il'i-ad	Nau-sith'o-us	Phœ'bus
Eu-ri'pus	Il'i-um	Nax'os	Phol'o-e
Eu-ro'tas	I'no	Ne'leus	Phœ-nic'i-a
Eu-ry'a-le	I-ob'a-tes	Nes'tor	(-ntsh'i-a)
Eu-ryd'i-ce	I-o-la'us	Nu-mid'i-a	Phrix'us
Eu-rys'theus	I-ol'cus	O-dys'seus	Phy-tal'id
Eux'ine	I-o'ni-an	Od'ys-sey	Phyt'a-lus
Gal-a-te'a	I'o-pe	Œn'o-e	Pin'dus
Ge-lo'ni	Ith'a-ca	Œ'ta	Pit'theus
Ge'ry-on	Lac-e-dæ'mon	O-i'leus	Pit-y-o-camp'tes
Ha'des	La-co'ni-a	O-lym'pus	Plu'to
Hæ-mo'ni-a	La'don	Or-chom'e-nus	Pol'lux
Hal-cy'o-ne	Lap'i-thæ	Or'pheus	Pol-y-dec'tes
Ha-li-ac'mon	La-ris'sa	Pag'a-sæ	Pol-y-deu'ces
Har'pe	Lem'nos	Pal-lan'tid	Po-sei'don

Pro-crus'tes	Sci'ron	Syr'tes	Thri-a'si-an
Præ'tus	Scyl'la	Syr'tis	(-shi-an)
Pro-me'theus	Scy'ros	Ta'los	Thym'bris
Pro-pon'tis	Se-li'nus	Tan'a-is	Thyn'i-as
Psyl'li ¹	Sem'e-le	Tar-tes'sus	Ti'phys
Rhi-pæ'an	Se'pi-as	Tau'ri	Ti'ryns
Rhod'o-pe	Ser-bo'ni-an	Tel'a-mon	Ti'tan
Rhyn'da-cus	Se-ri'phus	Te-lem'a-chus	Tri-bal'li
Sal'a-mis	Si'nis	Te'nos	Tri'ton
Sam-o-thra'ce	Si-no'pe	Tem'pe	Trip-tol'e-mus
San-ga'ri-us	Soc'ra-tes	Teu-ta'mi-as	Træ-ze'ne ²
Sa-ron'ic	Sthe'no	Ther-mop'y-læ	Tyr-rhe'ni-a
Sau-rom'a-tæ	Stry'mon	The'seus	Ze'tes
Sci'a-thos	Su'ni-um	The'tis	Zeus

¹ Initial p before a consonant is silent; therefore pronounce Syl'li.

² The more usual spelling is Træ'zen.

PRESSWORK BY
GINN & COMPANY,
BOSTON.

CLASSICS FOR CHILDREN.

In forming the mind and taste of the young, is it not better to use authors who have already lived long enough to afford some guaranty that they may survive the next twenty years?

"Children derive impulses of a wonderful and important kind from hearing things that they cannot entirely comprehend."—SIR WALTER SCOTT.

THE courses of study in our common schools are planned, it would seem, upon the expectation that all the pupils will have the advantages of a High School training; while the fact is that only one in twenty-five ever goes beyond the Grammar School. It is the aim of this series to remedy this great defect, so far as literature is concerned, and give to the other twenty-four a better outfit for the duties of life.

The ordinary reading-book consists largely of short selections from the authors of the day, ill-calculated to interest the pupil, or to form in him a taste for good reading. From a trial of several years it has been found that children of the ordinary Grammar School grade are capable of understanding and appreciating the best authors, like Scott, Irving, and even Shakespeare. This course presents, therefore, the choicest works of standard authors, complete as far as practicable, and gives such annotation at the foot of the page as will render them intelligible to the average pupil. The series is now complete through all the grades, and gives a much greater variety than any other course published. Many of the miscellaneous volumes are adapted to the Third and Fourth Reader grades.

The best proof of the need of such a course is the universal approbation with which it has been received.

The following are ready.

Each of the volumes is printed in large type, on good paper, and firmly bound. Each is complete; or abridged, where cutting has been necessary, by a skilful hand, without impairment of style or story. Illustrations, when desirable, are freely used. The prices have been made as low as possible. As there has been a large call from the High Schools for the Lady of the Lake, Greek Heroes, Quentin Durward, Stories of the Old World, Tales of a Grandfather, and others, an edition has been bound in cloth, omitting the headline "Classics for Children," as possibly objectionable to higher classes.

Æsop's Fables.

Edited by J. H. STICKNEY, with a Life of Æsop, and a Supplement containing fables from La Fontaine and Krilof. 12mo. xvii + 204 pages. Illustrated. Boards. Mailing Price, 40 cents; for introduction, 35 cents. Cloth: 60 and 50 cents.

THE book is first a Reader, then a means of language culture, and last, but by no means least, a partial manual of ethics.

"For its purpose nothing can be better."—B. A. HINSDALE, Supt. of Schools, Cleveland, O.

Hans Andersen's Fairy Tales.

Edited for school and home use, by J. H. Stickney.

FIRST SERIES: Supplementary to the Third Reader, for children from eight to twelve years of age. 12mo. viii + 280 pages. Illustrated. Mailing Prices: Cloth, 55 cents; Boards, 45 cents. For introduction: Cloth, 50 cents; Boards, 40 cents.

SECOND SERIES: Supplementary to the Fourth Reader, for children from ten to fourteen years of age. 12mo. 352 pages. Illustrated. Mailing Prices: Cloth, 55 cents; Boards, 45 cents. For introduction: Cloth, 50 cents; Boards, 40 cents.

THERE has hitherto been no edition adapted to the wants of the varied readers to whose capacities the stories were addressed. This embarrassment is avoided by the grading of the present edition. The text is based upon a sentence-by-sentence comparison of the translations current in England and America.

"The fairy tales of Andersen, always popular with grown folks as well as children, will bring joy into the schools."—L. D. BROWN, State Supt. of Schools, Ohio.

Kingsley's Water-Babies.

Edited by J. H. STICKNEY. 12mo. 204 pages. Illustrated. Board Mailing Price, 40 cents; for introduction, 35 cents. Cloth: 60 and cents.

TESTIMONY to any extent might easily be adduced to the excellent style and healthy tone of this beautiful story. A slight abridgment has perfectly adapted it to use in the schoolroom.

"One of the best books in the field, if not the best."—I. N. MITCHELL, Supt. of Schools, Grand Rapids, Mich.

The King of the Golden River; or, The Black Brothers.

By JOHN RUSKIN. A legend of Stiria. 12mo. 54 pages. Illustrated. Boards: Mailing Price, 24 cents; for introduction, 20 cents. Cloth: 30 and 25 cents.

A CHARMING and wholesome fairy tale by a great author. The quaint illustrations add much to its interest.

"One of the best of all children's stories."—HARTFORD COURANT.

The Swiss Family Robinson.

Edited by J. H. STICKNEY. viii + 364 pages. Illustrated. Boards: Mailing Price, 50 cents; for introduction, 40 cents. Cloth: 60 and 50 cents.

THE text has been carefully compiled from the best editions; and the Notes and Introduction will be found helpful.

"A fascinating story to children, giving healthful food to their love of adventure,"—CHILDREN'S NEW CHURCH MAGAZINE.

Robinson Crusoe.

The famous English Classic. Edited for Supplementary Reading in Schools, by W. H. LAMBERT. 12mo. 263 pages. Boards: Mailing Price, 40 cents; for introduction, 35 cents. Cloth: 60 and 50 cents.

IT has been slightly abridged by the omission of unimportant matter, and ends with Crusoe's leaving the island.

"How delighted children will be to have the privilege of reading in school the whole of Robinson Crusoe."—E. O. HOVEY, Prin. of High School, Newark, N.J.

Kingsley's Greek Heroes.

Edited by JOHN TETLOW, Head Master of the Girls' High and Latin Schools, Boston. 12mo. 168 pages. Illustrated. Boards: Mailing Price, 40 cents; for introduction, 35 cents. Cloth: 55 and 50 cents.

THIS book is particularly fitted to please the young, while its character and style are the very best.

"Beautiful, and well adapted for class use."—A. J. TIFFANY, Supt. of Schools, Nevada City, Cal.

Lamb's Tales from Shakespeare.

320 pages. Boards: Mailing Price, 50 cents; for introduction, 40 cents. Cloth: 60 and 50 cents.

ADAPTED to class use by the omission of Measure for Measure, not suited for children, and by a few verbal changes.

"I regard it as a most excellent book for Grammar School use."—JOHN S. HAYES, Prin. of Foster School, Somerville, Mass.

Scott's Tales of a Grandfather.

Being the history of Scotland from the earliest period to its union with England under James VI. Abridged by EDWIN GINN. Boards: Mailing Price, 50 cents; for introduction, 40 cents. Cloth: 60 and 50 cents.

THE story of a heroic age narrated in the matchless style of the great national author.

"I have examined it with the greatest satisfaction."—ROBERT C. WINTHROP.

The Peasant and the Prince.

By HARRIET MARTINEAU. 12mo. viii + 212 pages. Illustrated. Boards: Mailing Price, 40 cents; for introduction, 35 cents. Cloth: Mailing Price, 55 cents; for introduction, 50 cents.

A STORY of the French Revolution, clothing history with all the charm of fiction.

"A most fascinating historical story, well calculated to interest children."—SEBASTIAN THOMAS, Supt. of Schools, Ashland, O.

Scott's Lady of the Lake.

Edited by EDWIN GINN. 12mo. 268 pages. Boards: Mailing Price, 40 cents; for introduction, 35 cents. Cloth: 60 and 50 cents.

IT contains a brief life of Scott, and his critical notes on the poem carefully abridged, with sufficient annotation to be easily read by children ten years old. It also contains a brief life of James V., as well as a full description of the Highlands and their clans during his reign.

"I think the editing admirable."—WM. T. HARRIS.

Adventures of Ulysses.

By CHARLES LAMB. 12mo. vii + 109 pages. Boards: Mailing Price, 30 cents; for introduction, 25 cents. Cloth: Mailing Price, 40 cents; for introduction, 35 cents.

THE charm of the author's style is fairly equalled by the charm of his story. There is no abridgment.

"I wish we could adopt them all."—H. F. HARRINGTON, Supt. of Schools, New Bedford, Mass.

Stories of the Old World.

Prepared expressly for this Series by the Rev. ALFRED J. CHURCH, M.A. author of Stories from Homer, Livy, Virgil, etc. 12mo. 354 pages. Boards: Mailing Price, 50 cents; for introduction, 40 cents. Cloth: 60 and 50 cents.

THE contents comprise the stories of the Argo, Thebes, the Iliad, Odyssey, and Æneid.

"These stories will interest and profit readers of all ages."—N. E. JOURNAL OF EDUCATION.

Plutarch's Lives.

From Clough's Translation. Edited by EDWIN GINN, with Historical Introductions by W. F. ALLEN. 12mo. xvi + 333 pages. Illustrated. Boards: Mailing Price, 50 cents; for introduction, 40 cents. Cloth: Mailing Price, 60 cents; for introduction, 50 cents.

THE volume includes the lives of Plutarch, Themistocles, Pericles, Alexander, Coriolanus, Fabius, Sertorius, and Cæsar, and a pronouncing table of proper names.

"Like the other books of this series, it deserves more than praise."—S. M. ARNELL, Supt. of Schools, Columbia, Tenn.

Scott's Talisman.

Edited by DWIGHT HOLBROOK, Principal of Morgan School, Clinton, Conn., with an Introduction by Miss CHARLOTTE M. YONGE. 12mo. xii + 454 pages. Boards: Mailing Price, 60 cents; for introduction, 50 cents. Cloth: 70 and 60 cents.

THE Talisman serves a double purpose, both as introducing Scott to youth, and as affording a graphic account of an important period of history. It is here given without abridgment.

"Everything that brings Scott home to the complete apprehension of the young is a moral power for good, as well as a literary help."—A. C. PERKINS, Prin. of Adelphi Academy, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Scott's Quentin Durward.

Edited for this Series, with an Historical Introduction, by CHARLOTTE M. YONGE, of England. 12mo. 312 pages. Boards: Mailing Price, 50 cents; for introduction, 40 cents. Cloth: 60 and 50 cents.

IN this edition the violence of old times is mitigated, while the interest of the story, and its lessons of fidelity, courage, and sturdy manhood, are not weakened.

"For supplementary reading in schools, and for the home circle, this attractive volume will be found admirable."—N. E. JOURNAL OF EDUCATION.

Irving's Sketch Book.

With full Notes, Questions, etc., for Home and School Use. By HOMER B. SPRAGUE, Ph.D., and M. E. SCATES, formerly of the Girls' High School, Boston. 12mo. 126 pages. Boards: Mailing Price, 30 cents; for introduction, 25 cents. Cloth: Mailing Price, 40 cents; for introduction, 35 cents.

THIS volume comprises The Voyage, Westminster Abbey, The Widow and her Son, Rip Van Winkle, The Legend of Sleepy Hollow, and Christmas.

"It is the best-edited 'English Classic' (I mean for common, everyday use in the schools) I have ever seen."—A. F. BLAISDELL, Author of "Outlines of English Literature."

Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

HUDSON and LAMB. 12mo. 115 pages. Boards: Mailing Price, 30 cents; for introduction, 25 cents. Cloth: 45 and 40 cents.

IT contains Hudson's Life of Shakespeare, and about two-thirds of the Text and Notes of his School Edition, and Lamb's Story of the play. None of the omissions impair the value of the work for children.

"Mr. Hudson's text-books need no commendation."—E. R. SHIPMAN, Prof. of English Literature, Williams College.

Scott's Guy Mannering.

Edited with Notes, and a Historical Introduction by Miss CHARLOTTE M. YONGE. 12mo. 525 pages. Boards: Mailing Price, 70 cents; for introduction, 60 cents. Cloth: Mailing Price, 85 cents; for introduction, 75 cents.

NO remarks need be made upon the interest of this book, or its fitness for a reader. It is given without abridgment.

"I am delighted with this edition of Scott."—Miss J. M. WOODWARD, State Normal School, New Britain, Conn.

Scott's Ivanhoe.

Edited with Notes, and a Historical Introduction by Miss CHARLOTTE M. YONGE. 12mo. 554 pages. Boards: Mailing Price, 70 cents; for introduction, 60 cents. Cloth: Mailing Price, 85 cents; for introduction, 75 cents.

LIKE the Talisman and Guy Mannering, Ivanhoe is given complete.

"A beautiful edition."—F. A. CARPENTER, High School, Portland, Me.

Gulliver's Travels.

By DEAN SWIFT. 12mo. ix + 162 pages. Boards: Mailing Price, 35 cents; for introduction, 30 cents. Cloth: Mailing Price, 45 cents; for introduction, 40 cents.

I. VOYAGE to Lilliput; II. Voyage to Brobdingnag; with a sketch of the author's life.

"Every child has been deprived of a part of his birth-right if he does not read this."—TEXAS SCHOOL JOURNAL.

Rasselas, Prince of Abyssinia.

By Dr. SAMUEL JOHNSON, with a Sketch of the Author. 12mo. viii + 155 pages. Boards: Mailing Price, 35 cents; for introduction, 30 cents. Cloth: Mailing Price, 45 cents; for introduction, 40 cents.

THE story of the pursuit for happiness, old, but ever new, and a specimen of the style of the first writer of English of his day.

"It is a classic, pure and simple; fascinating, and yet never available for school use until now."—W. H. SMALL, Prin. of High School Hudson, Mass.

Scott's Lay of the Last Minstrel.

With map. Edited by MARGARET ANDREWS ALLEN. 12mo. 150 pages. Boards: Mailing price, 35 cents; for introduction, 30 cents. Cloth: 45 and 40 cents.

THE annotation of this volume is similar to that on the Lady of the Lake. The poem is given entire.

The Arabian Nights.

Selections, edited by Rev. EDWARD EVERETT HALE, D.D. Illustrated. 12mo. 376 pages. Boards: Mailing price, 50 cents; for introduction, 40 cents. Cloth: 60 and 50 cents.

AS a book of surpassing interest, and as an introduction to the manners and characters of Eastern peoples, the Arabian Nights must be regarded as of high value. This edition has been prepared especially for use in schools.

The Vicar of Wakefield.

Edited, with Notes, for Use in Schools. 12mo. 238 pages. Boards: Mailing price, 35 cents; for introduction, 30 cents. Cloth: 55 and 50 cents.

THIS is pre-eminently a "classic," and like many other volumes in this series is no less valuable for the moral lessons it conveys than for its interest and its literary style.

Scott's Rob Roy.

Edited, with Notes and a Historical Introduction by MISS CHARLOTTE M. YONGE. viii + 507 pages. Boards: Mailing price, 70 cents; for introduction, 60 cents. Cloth: 85 and 75 cents.

THIS volume is edited and annotated like the Ivanhoe and Guy Mannering, and, like them, is complete.

Twilight Thoughts.

Stories for Children and Child Lovers. By MARY S. CLAUDE. Edited by Mary L. Avery, with a Preface by Matthew Arnold. 12mo. Cloth. 104 pages. Mailing price, 50 cents; for introduction, 40 cents.

THIS volume does not belong to the series of Classics for Children, but the testimony of Matthew Arnold is sufficient evidence of the interest, wholesomeness, and literary excellence of these Westmoreland stories.

Washington and His Country.

By WASHINGTON IRVING and JOHN FISKE. 654 pages, including 13 maps. 12mo. Cloth. Mailing price, $1.10; for introduction, $1.00.

QUESTIONS, prepared to facilitate the use of the work as a text-book of United States history will be published in April.

THIS consists of Irving's Life of Washington, judiciously abridged by John Fiske, and supplemented with an Introduction and a Continuation by Mr. Fiske that make the work in effect a History of the United States. It is anticipated that this History will be cordially welcomed and will exert a great influence upon present methods and courses of study. It will be found to combine many peculiar excellences.

1. History is taught through biography. This secures the greatest interest, unity, and clearness, and, at the same time, the greatest moral value.

2. The history is presented in a readable outline. The salient points are fully and vividly set forth, and cannot fail to impress the memory and the imagination.

3. The pupil has before him in this book the thought and language of an acknowledged master of English.

4. The abridging and the supplementing have been done by one exceptionally competent. The Introduction and the Continuation are masterly sketches, unequalled by anything hitherto published.

Thus, while acquiring a knowledge of facts and events, the pupil is gaining a love for history and literature, moulding his diction by a classic author, and ennobling his character by contemplating one of the grandest types of humanity. There will be less of mechanical study and more of the real, less committing to memory of trivial facts, and a firmer grasp of the important ones.

W. E. Buck, Supt. of Schools, Manchester, N.H.: I cannot think of another book so desirable for collateral reading by pupils studying history in the common schools.

E. H. Russell, Prin. of Normal School, Worcester, Mass.: I have ordered a supply for class use. It seems to me the most noteworthy book that has appeared in this field for years. I recommend it right and left without reserve.

Thomas M. Balliet, Supt. of Schools, Springfield, Mass.: It can be used as a text-book on U. S. History; and as a book for supplementary reading on the subject, I don't know of anything else equal to it.

(Jan. 20, 1888.)

S. T. Dutton, Supt. of Schools, New Haven, Ct.: One of the greatest of Irving's works, it is indeed a classic, and this handy edition judiciously condensed and extended will rank as one of the best school histories and one of the most suitable reading-books in the market.

J. A. Graves, Prin. of South School, Hartford, Ct.: We feel sure that it will be a valuable and important addition to the list of books for supplementary work in history.

Albert C. Perkins, Prin. of Adelphi Acad., Brooklyn, N.Y.: As a book to keep within reach of classes in American history it seems to me excellent. Indeed, if used as a textbook in that branch, I believe it must bring the best results in impressing on the minds of pupils a sense of the spirit and genius of our history as well as the leading facts of it.

Henry P. Emerson, Prin. of High School, Buffalo, N.Y.: Uniting the grace of Irving with the strength of Fiske is a good thought.

F. B. Palmer, Prin. of State Normal School, Fredonia, N.Y.: I should think the work of abridgment admirably done and the additions judicious, and heartily welcome the work as likely to revive interest in one of our best authors and one of the noblest themes that can be placed before the young. (Dec. 22, 1887.)

E. T. Tomlinson, Headmaster of Rutgers Coll. Gram. School, New Brunswick, N.J.: To my mind it will prove a valuable book for school purposes. (Jan. 3, 1888.)

O. D. Robinson, Prin. of High School, Albany, N.Y.: I believe that it is admirable in every respect for the objects which the author had in view when preparing it. It is history, biography, and literature of the very best, all combined.

John G. Wright, Prin. of Union School, Cooperstown, N.Y.: It is the happiest thought yet in the way of an abridged history. (Dec. 20, 1887.)

C. B. Wood, Prin. of High School, Pittsburgh, Pa.: The book is a gem. I have placed it in the hands of the teacher of history, and recommended it as a book of reference.

E. C. Delano, Ass't Supt. of Schools, Chicago, Ill.: It is a charming book, well fitted for historical and supplementary reading in the advanced grades of our public schools.

Lewis H. Jones, Supt. of Public Schools, Indianapolis, Ind.: It seems to be admirably adapted to secure two of the most important aims that are ever reached in historical teaching—love of country and love of good historical reading.

O. T. Bright, Supt. of Public Schools, Englewood, Ill.: It seems to me very valuable as an adjunct in teaching United States history. I have seen no other book to compare with it in value as supplementary to the study named. (Jan. 23, 1888.)

J. B. Young, Supt. of Public Schools, Davenport, Ia.: It sets forth in a simple and captivating style all the important facts of our country's history, without burdening its pages or the mind with valueless detail wherever it is used. (Feb. 2, 1888.)

E. Stanley, Supt. of Public Schools, Lawrence, Kan.: It is a volume of remarkable merit, written in an admirable style, full of interest, and attractive beyond ordinary books.

F. M. Draper, Supt. of Public Schools, Atchison, Kan.: Something must be done to correct the faulty methods of teaching history. I believe this a step in that direction.

THE CRITICS

have uniformly approved of the design and the execution of this series. Only a few more comments can be quoted.

A. Beljame, Docteur ès Lettres, Maître de Conférences à La Faculté des Lettres de Paris (Université de France): I regret that I did not receive the books some months before, as I should certainly have recommended to the students under my direction your edition of Scott's Lady of the Lake, and your Selections from Washington Irving's Sketch Book.

Thos. Wentworth Higginson: Allow me to express hearty sympathy in your plan of Classics for Children, and to say how much I like the specimens that have thus far appeared.

J. W. Stearns, Prof. of Pedagogics in the State Univ., and editor of the Wisconsin "Journal of Education, Madison," Wis.: The enterprise interests me very much, as you have done what for a long time has seemed to me the most valuable service that could be done for the public schools, by publishing in cheap and readable form classics for reading-books. Your selections, so far as I have seen them, are admirable.

M. Schele de Vere, Prof. of English, University of Virginia: Nothing would be more gratifying to us of the South than to see this admirable series in every public or private school, since it is beyond question the best remedy for the daily-increasing evil,—an imperfect knowledge of English.

Hon. Robt. C. Winthrop: The design and the execution of your Classics for Children seem to me alike excellent.

James Parton, the eminent author: I have received the specimen of your series which you have sent me, and I congratulate the children upon having them to read in school time, which used to be so tedious.

J. H. Vincent, Supt. of Instruction, Chautauqua Assembly: I have received and have examined with care the Classics for Children, published by your house. I desire to express my great satisfaction with the taste, skill, and wisdom of the work. I wish it abundant success.

Edward Everett Hale, Boston: The Lady of the Lake meets the wish which I have been uttering everywhere for twenty years,—for good, cheap books for the real American people. The Lady of the Lake is well printed, well edited, well enough bound, and can be bought by any man who does not drink or steal, who earns a dollar and a half a day.

Mellen Chamberlain, Librarian Boston Public Library: These publications seem to me to be of great value, whether regarded as home reading or for use in the public school.

Eben S. Stearns, Chancellor of State Normal School, Nashville, Tenn.: Such as I have seen are admirably adapted to awaken in children and youth a love for English classic literature, and will be welcomed by all teachers who intend to keep at the front, however rapid the progress in this useful and fascinating study may be. (Oct. 30, 1886.)

E. A. Sheldon, Prin. of State Normal School, Oneego, N.Y.: I am very much pleased with the plan of these books, and with the happy manner in which the plan is executed. I shall introduce them into our school work as far as practical. They meet a felt want in our school. (Nov. 2, 1886.)

J. W. Holcomb, State Supt. of Public Schools, Indianapolis, Ind.: Every home where there are children should have them, and I wish them a wide circulation in the schools of the country. (Sept. 11, 1886.)

Leverett M. Chase, Prin. of Dudley School, Boston, Mass.: I consider them clearly the best of their kind. They should have a place in every school of proper grade. (Dec. 20, 1886.)

A. P. Marble, Supt. of Schools, Worcester, Mass.: Your Classics for Children are giving first-rate satisfaction as supplementary reading in the schools of this city. Besides being interesting to the children they tend to form a correct literary taste. (Dec. 28, 1885.)

Wm. E. Buck, Supt. of Schools, Manchester, N.H.: They are not only admirable, but without a rival as a series of choice literature for children.

S. A. Ellis, Supt. of Schools, Rochester, N.Y.: The suggestion of Dr. Harris that this series of books ought to be in each school in the land is a good one, and I trust may soon become an accomplished fact. No boy or girl, it seems to me, can properly grow up without reading them all.

B. A. Hinsdale, Supt. of Schools, Cleveland, O.: The idea is excellent, and so is the execution. The literary quality, mechanical workmanship, and prices of this series of books, all commend them to popular favor.

A. D. Wharton, Prin. of High School, Nashville, Tenn.: I have heretofore expressed the opinion that you were developing one of the best educational ideas of the present time in issuing the Classics for Children, and I can truly say that I am rejoiced at each successive issue. (Sept. 1, 1886.)

B. F. Wright, recently Supt. of Schools, St. Paul, Minn.: After actual use of several of the series of Classics for Children in our schools, I desire to express my appreciation of this effort to furnish the best reading-matter for little folks. The selections have been excellent. I congratulate you on the success of the movement. (Jan. 13, 1886.)

W. F. Slaton, Supt. of Schools, Atlanta, Ga.: The Classics for Children I have never seen surpassed. Attractive in form, select, chaste, the books must captivate.

W. E. Anderson, Supt. of Schools, Milwaukee, Wis.: I most cheerfully testify to their great merit and superior adaptability as volumes for supplementary reading or for general reading.

Wm. H. Beach, Supt. of Schools, Madison, Wis.: We are greatly pleased with them.

M. A. Newell, State Supt. of Schools, Md.: The children who read them will thank you. There is nothing so much needed as good and cheap reading for children. You have supplied the want. In my annual report, now in the printer's hands, I have said, "Goody-goody books, weekly novelettes, sensational novels, and vicious romances will have no attraction for the youth whose memory is filled with specimens of the best and purest of our English authors. It is the empty house that welcomes the bad tenant."

F. Louis Soldan, Prin. of Normal School, St. Louis, Mo.: The idea underlying these books is meritorious in itself, and its execution admirable.

E. B. Neely, Supt. of Schools, St. Joseph, Mo.: Boys and girls who could not be induced to read any book find themselves greatly interested in the books of this series, and others, whose reading heretofore was confined to the dime-novel type of literature, have lost all taste for that kind of trash.

The children are becoming interested in reading, and in consequence are becoming better readers.

(Jan. 9, 1886.)

Richard C. Meade, Supt. of Schools, Atchison, Kansas: They are just the thing. I should like to see them not only in every school-room in this city, but in every family.

(Jan. 8, 1886.)

D. C. Tillotson, Supt. of Schools, Topeka, Kansas: You are making it possible for children to be taught to read from books that mean something to them. (Jan. 7, 1886.)

Henry M. James, Supt. of Schools, Omaha, Neb.: They are excellent, and their adoption must result in great advantage to any schools that use them. (Jan. 18, 1886.)

E. B. McElroy, State Supt. of Public Instruction, Salem, Oregon: I regard the Classics for Children as pre-eminently adapted to produce a love of good literature and wholesome reading among children.

W. T. Harris, Concord, Mass.: I am highly pleased with the appearance of the books, and admire the excellent taste and judgment displayed in selecting so many works that are at once classical in their standard and popular in their style. If all schools will purchase ten copies of each and lend them to pupils, say a week at a time for each book, the pupils will soon acquire a facility of reading at sight, a large vocabulary of good English, and a knowledge of human nature. (Oct. 18, 1886.)

Edward S. Joynes, Prof. of English, South Carolina College, Columbia: If it were possible to add anything to the cordial and grateful commendation already expressed, I should be glad to do so.

(March 14, 1887.)

L. E. Wolfe, Supt. of Schools, Moberly, Mo.: At the beginning of the school year I ordered about fifty dollars' worth of your supplementary reading. Teachers and pupils are delighted, and feel that the books have borne abundant fruit.

(March 14, 1887.)

C. B. Gibson, Pres. of State Normal School, Jacksonville, Ala.: They will effect, I am sure, a good, healthy desire for reading among the pupils of our schools; something that will be more lasting and beneficial than any amusement we can afford them. (Sept. 4, 1886.)

A. W. Mell, Prin. Southern Normal School, Bowling Green, Ky.: Of the Classics for Children it ought to be understood that they furnish mental food for child-nature in the exact measure of quality and quantity. The Water Babies, that I carried in my pocket on taking the train for Indianapolis last year, captured me and kept me to themselves for the whole length of my journey to that city. I read your edition of Scott before others in my library. You may feel that you have blessed the children. (December, 1886.)

Those Dreadful Mouse Boys.

A Double Story for Young and Old. By ARIEL. Second Edition. Small quarto. Illustrated. 262 pages. Mailing prices: Cloth, $1.00; Boards, 60 cents; Introduction prices, 80 cents and 50 cents.

On the surface it is a story of mouse boys and girls, — their mischievous pranks, and the cruelty of twin brothers to their timid little sister. The latter in her adventures sees much of the world with a mouse's eyes, and shows that despised little creatures often live in a larger world than ours.

Beneath the story older readers will detect a skeleton garlanded with fancies which may be the story of human lives.

The endeavor is to show, both in its plain and in its hidden meaning, the contrast between narrow, selfish lives, and broad, generous ones.

E. E. Hale, Boston: A bright, clever satire, carrying a very good moral.

F. H. Underwood, Boston: All bright and imaginative children will enjoy it heartily.

Samuel Adams Drake: Possessing marked originality, both in conception and treatment.

C. A. Bartol, Boston: The small morals are like gilded pills, which children will be attracted by, and will swallow without knowing they are medicine.

Rev. F. L. Norton, Dean of All Saints' Cathedral, Albany, N. Y.: Every page has its own stamp of the author's undoubted genius. I feel that my three boys are better for the reading of the book.

A. P. Peabody, Cambridge, Mass.: The book, I find, charms its readers by its genuine wit, its freedom from aught that can offend the most fastidious taste, and the art and skill of a very high order displayed in the framework and development of the story.

Jos. T. Duryea, Boston: I have tested the book by putting it into the hands of those to whom it is adapted. I find it proves entertaining and instructive. The little folks are enthusiastic over it.

Wm. R. Alger, Boston: The reading of it is a happiness which does one good. It has made me feel happier and better. It is full of wit, humor, genial satire, poetic fancy, and pervaded by a thoroughly admirable moral temper, bright, light, sweet, cheery, sound, and useful.

Herald, Boston: Both amusing and instructive.

American Bookseller: The author shows capacity for this kind of work, which involves a special kind of genius.

N. Y. School Journal: Children will not only be amused in reading it, but will be unconsciously instructed.

Pilgrims and Puritans.

By MISS N. MOORE. Square 16mo. Cloth. viii + 197 pages. Illustrated. Mailing Price, 70 cents; for introduction, 60 cents.

THIS is a book of easy reading, containing sketches of the early days of Massachusetts, — Massachusetts Indians, the Pilgrims of Plymouth, English Boston, William Blackstone, John Winthrop, Extracts from Wood's New England's Prospect; with notes and appendix.

It is intended for children who have not yet begun or are just beginning the study of United States History, and to supplement or prepare the way for the ordinary text-book. It has already been used by children under ten years of age. It is provided with maps and illustrations.

W. E. Sheldon, Editor of American Teacher, Boston, Mass.: I have read this narrative of the settlement of Plymouth with great delight.

J. C. Greenough, Prin. of State Normal School, Westfield, Mass.: It is an excellent book, both for the fireside and the school.

The Herald, Boston: "Pilgrims and Puritans" is the work of a woman who has perceived an opportunity, and has used it extremely well, giving her young readers the story of the Plymouth settlement as it is told by Bradford and Winslow, using Governor Winthrop's journal as the principal material for an account of the founding of Boston. Her own writing is clear and straightforward, and serves very well to supply the links needed to make the stories entire, and there is little danger that classes studying from this book will soon forget it.

Virginia Educational Journal: Who ever tires of the story of those sturdy settlers who laid the foundations of New England's civilization and greatness? Here we have the familiar narrative of Bradford and Winslow and Winthrop, presented in a most attractive setting, and brought within the comprehension of young readers.

Sunday Express, Albany, N. Y.: This is a straightforward little story of the early history of the Puritan sect and of their settlement of New England. The book is intended for the children, and the simplicity of its style adapts it well for that purpose.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

Stories of the Anti-Slavery Period.

The Guinea Negroes, William Lloyd Garrison, Shadrach, and Anthony Burns. Each, in paper cover, mailing price, 15 cents; for introduction, 11 cents.

Hudson's Expurgated Shakespeare.

For Schools, Clubs, and Families. Revised and enlarged Editions of twenty-three Plays. Carefully expurgated, with Explanatory Notes at the bottom of the page, and Critical Notes at the end of each volume. By H. N. HUDSON, LL.D., Editor of The Harvard Shakespeare. One play in each volume. Square 16mo. Varying in size from 128-253 pages. Mailing Price of each: Cloth, 50 cents; Paper, 35 cents. Introduction Price: Cloth, 45 cents; Paper, 30 cents. Per set (in box), $12.00. (To Teachers, $10.00.)

SOME of the special features of this edition are the convenient size and shape of the volumes; the clear type, superior press-work, and attractive binding; the ample introductions; the explanatory notes, easily found at the foot of the page; the critical notes for special study; the judicious expurgation, never mangling either style or story; the acute and sympathetic criticism that has come to be associated with Dr. HUDSON's name; and, finally, the reasonableness of the price.

Oliver Wendell Holmes: An edition of any play of Shakespeare's to which Mr. Hudson's name is affixed does not need a line from anybody to commend it.

Cyrus Northrop, Prof. of English Literature, Yale College: They are convenient in form and edited by Hudson,—two good things which I can see at a glance.

Hiram Corson, Prof. of Rhet. and Eng. Lit., Cornell University: I consider them altogether excellent. The notes give all the aid needed for an understanding of the text, without waste and distraction of the student's mind. The introductory matter to the several plays is especially worthy of approbation. (Jan. 28, 1887.)

C. F. P. Bancroft, Prin. of Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass.: Mr. Hudson's appreciation of Shakespeare amounted to genius. His editing accordingly exhibits more than learning and industry.—it reveals insight, sympathy, and conviction. He leads the pupil into the very mind and heart of "the thousand-souled Shakespeare."

Byron Groce, Master in Public Latin School, Boston: The amended text is satisfactory; the typography is excellent; the notes are brief, always helpful, not too numerous, and put where they will do the most good; the introductions are vigorous, inspiring, keenly and soundly critical, and very attractive to boys, especially on account of their directness and warmth, for all boys like enthusiasm. (Jan. 22, 1887.)

C. T. Winchester, Prof. of English, Wesleyan University: The notes and comments in the school edition are admirably fitted to the need of the student, removing his difficulties by stimulating his interest and quickening his perception. (Feb. 10, 1887.)

A. C. Perkins, Prin. of Adelphi Academy, Brooklyn: In the preparation of the School Shakespeare, Mr. Hudson met fully the capacities and needs of students in our schools and colleges. (Feb. 4, 1887.)

The series consists of the twenty-three plays enumerated below
We furnish of the Old Edition, in paper covers, the plays starred in the following list (Mailing Price, 20 cents; Introduction, 15 cents):—

- | | |
|--|------------------------------------|
| *A Midsummer-Night's Dream. ³ | *Henry the Fifth. ² |
| *The Merchant of Venice. ¹ | *Henry the Eighth. ² |
| *Much Ado About Nothing. ³ | *Romeo and Juliet. ³ |
| *As You Like It. ¹ | *Julius Cæsar. ¹ |
| Twelfth Night. ¹ | *Hamlet. ¹ |
| *The Tempest. ² | *King Lear. ² |
| The Winter's Tale. ² | *Macbeth. ² |
| King John. | Antony and Cleopatra. ¹ |
| Richard Second. | *Othello. ³ |
| Richard Third. ² | Cymbeline. ³ |
| *Henry Fourth, Part First. ¹ | *Coriolanus. ³ |
| Henry Fourth, Part Second. ¹ | |

Hudson's Three-Volume Shakespeare.

For Schools, Families, and Clubs. With Introductions and Notes on each Play. 12mo. Cloth. 636-678 pages per volume. Mailing Price, per volume, $1.40; Introduction, $1.25.

The plays included in the three volumes respectively are indicated by figures in the above list.

The Harvard Edition of Shakespeare's Complete

Works.

By HENRY N. HUDSON, LL.D., Author of the Life, Art, and Characters of Shakespeare, Editor of School Shakespeare, etc. In Twenty Volumes; 12mo; two plays in each volume; also in Ten Volumes, of four plays each.

RETAIL PRICES.

Twenty-vol. edition, cloth . . . $25.00	Ten-vol. edition, cloth . . . $20.00
Half-calf 55.00	Half-calf 40.00

 Buyers should be careful in ordering not to confound the Harvard Shakespeare with an Old Edition made in 1851, and sold under another name.

THIS is pre-eminently the edition for libraries, students, and general readers. The type, paper, and binding are attractive and superior, and the notes represent the editor's ripest thought.

An obvious merit of this edition is, that each volume has two sets of notes; one mainly devoted to explaining the text, and placed at the foot of the page; the other mostly occupied with matters of textual comment and criticism, and printed at the end of each play. This arrangement is particularly suited to the convenience of the general student, who does not wish to hunt for an explanation; and to the wants of the special student, who desires extended discussion of a difficulty.

E. P. Whipple, The Noted Critic: Hudson's is the most thoughtful and intelligent interpretative criticism which has, during the present century, been written, either in English or German.

N. Y. Evening Express: The most satisfactory and complete edition we have.

N. Y. Tribune: As an interpreter of Shakespeare, imbued with the vital essence of the great English dramatist, and equally qualified by insight and study to penetrate the deepest significance of his writings, it would be difficult to name an English or American scholar who can be compared with the editor of this edition.

Hudson's Life, Art, and Characters of Shakespeare (Revised Edition, 1882).

By HENRY N. HUDSON, LL.D., Editor of The Harvard Shakespeare, etc. In 2 vols. 12mo. 969 pages. Uniform in size with The Harvard Shakespeare, and matches it in the following bindings:—

Cloth	Retail Price, $4.00 per set.
Half-calf	" " 8.00 "

THESE two volumes contain: The Life of Shakespeare; An Historical Sketch of the Origin and Growth of the Drama in England; Shakespeare's Contemporaries; Shakespeare's Art, discussing under this head, Nature and Use of Art, Principles of Art, Dramatic Composition, Characterization, Humour, Style, Moral Spirit; Shakespeare's Characters, containing critical discourses on twenty-five of the Plays.

London Athenæum: They deserve to find a place in every library devoted to Shakespeare, to editions of his works, to his biography, or to the works of commentators.

